Among the keynote speakers will be Representative Morris Udall, Arizona; Dr. Evelyn Murphy, Mass. Secretary of Economic Development and Manpower Affairs, and Russell Peterson, President and Chief Executive Officer, National Audobon Society.

Cliff Mitman

Cliff Mitman, who is unopposed for one of the three-year terms for Cohasset Board of Selectmen, is continuing to hold coffees to discuss concerns of town residents and the role of the office of selectman.

"Since I am running unopposed, these coffees have a different objective from when they were planned," Mitman said. "I am anxious to meet people I don't know and to hear the thoughts of all voters on major issues facing the town now and in the future."

Among the topics being discussed at the coffees are the sewer proposal, town department operations, role of town counsel, the new town computer and the selectmen's role in managing the police and fire departments.

A coffee will be held at 8 p.m. Monday, March 21 at the home of Rob and Pam Henry, 50 Lantern Lane. On Tuesday, March 22 at 8 p.m. Jack and Carol Martin and Phil and Joan Shockman will host a meeting at 45 N. Main Street. All voters are welcome and encouraged to meet Cliff Mitman and discuss issues that concern them.

Ted Guild

The following coffees have been scheduled by the Committee To Elect Ted Guild Sewer Commissioner for the one-year term. Those interested in attending are invited to call one of the hosts.

March 17: Gary and Ann Vanderweil, 500 Jerusalem Road, 383-6590.

March 21: Ed and Priscilla Long, 31 Nichols Road, 383-1426.

March 28: Austin and Nancy O'Toole, 13 Haystack Lane, 383-1547.

April 5: George and Patsy Rabstejnek, 181 Border St., 383-1762.

April 7: Tom and Sue Killilea, 110 Atlantic Ave., 383-6589.

Anthony Fasciano

Anthony P. Fasciano is a candidate for a three-year term on the Board of Water Commissioners at the Annual Town Elections, April 9.

Fasciano, who resides at 3 Bound Brook Lane, has been a builder and general contractor in his own company for the past 13 years. As a contractor he deals with residential and commercial properties, planning, through excavation and finished product.

He has worked closely with municipal and state inspectors with regard to building specifications and water services. Previously to operating his own business, he was in charge of plant facilities for Raytheon Company; he also worked as a mechanical designer for J.J. Henry Co. of Cohasset.

His objective in running for the Water Commission is several-fold. Fasciano sees a need for a capital budget plan to replace old, faulty and leaking pipes, in an effort to improve the quality of the water and to make billing services more efficient. "I have a feeling many of us are paying for water we're not using," Fasciano said.

He supports a recent move by the Water Commissioners to contract out its meter-reading services, which Fasciano feels will allow staff more time to devote to the running of the water department. "This will also permit the water department to get its billings out in a more timely fashion," Fasciano said.

Collection processes throughout the Town need a fresh approach, Fasciano said. "I understand the need for a better collection method has been recognized by the Advisory Board. As a Water Commissioner I would work with the Town Accountant and the Executive Secretary to help to implement a better collection process."

During the past several years Fasciano has been active in Town government affairs. In recent months he has been most active in a petition drive for a five-member board of selectmen.

Fasciano is married to Mary Lou Fasciano. His children, Mark and Gail, are students at Cohasset High School. Mary Beth is a student at Bridgewater State University.

Tomorrow the Irish (and some who are not) will honor St. Patrick, the fifth century figure who converted Ireland to Christianity. Being on the South Shore can't compare to the revelry to be found in South Boston where many an Irishman will raise a glass to toast the Emerald Isle. We've all heard of the traditional Irish Stew, Irish Whiskey and Irish Coffee, but have you ever tried

SHAMROCK POTATO MUFFINS

1 pkg. active dry yeast
1¼ c. warm water (105 to 115 deg.)
1/2 of 5-serving envelope of mashed potato granules
1 tsp. each salt and sugar
1/4 c. oil or melted shortening
2½ c. all-purpose flour
3 T cornmeal

Dissolve yeast in warm water in large mixing bowl. Add potato granules, salt, sugar, oil and flour; stir until smooth. Roll dough to 1/4" thickness on floured surface; cut into 3" shamrock shapes or circles. Sprinkle two ungreased baking sheets with half the cornmeal, place muffins on baking sheets and sprinkle with remaining cornmeal. Let rise in warm place about one hour until light. Cook muffins in ungreased electric skillet at 325 degrees for five to seven min. on each side, or bake at 425 degrees for 10 min. without turning. Muffins are good split and toasted. Makes about 12 muffins. These are equally good hot from the griddle or split and toasted for breakfast.

Sure to bring the leprechauns out of hiding is the holiday aroma of a traditional Irish dish. Often made with kale, cabbage may be used to make Colcannon and if you really want to get in a party mood for St. Patrick's, make up the dish with a gold ring, a coin, a thimble and a button. The person who finds the ring in a helping of colcannon will be married within the year. The coin denotes wealth, the thimble spinsterhood and the button bachelorhood.

COLCANNON

1 pound kale or cabbage, cooked
1 pound potatoes, peeled and cooked
2 small leeks, scallions or green onions, plus tops
1 c. milk or cream
1/2 c. butter
Salt, pepper and pinch of mace

Chop cooked kale or cabbage. Keep warm while potatoes cook. Chop leeks and simmer in milk just to cover until soft. Drain potatoes, season and beat well. Add cooked leeks with the milk to the potatoes. Blend in kale or cabbage, beating until mixture is a pale green fluff. Pile into deep, warmed dish. Make a well in the center and pour in enough melted butter to fill up the hole. Leftovers can be fried in hot bacon fat until crisp and brown.

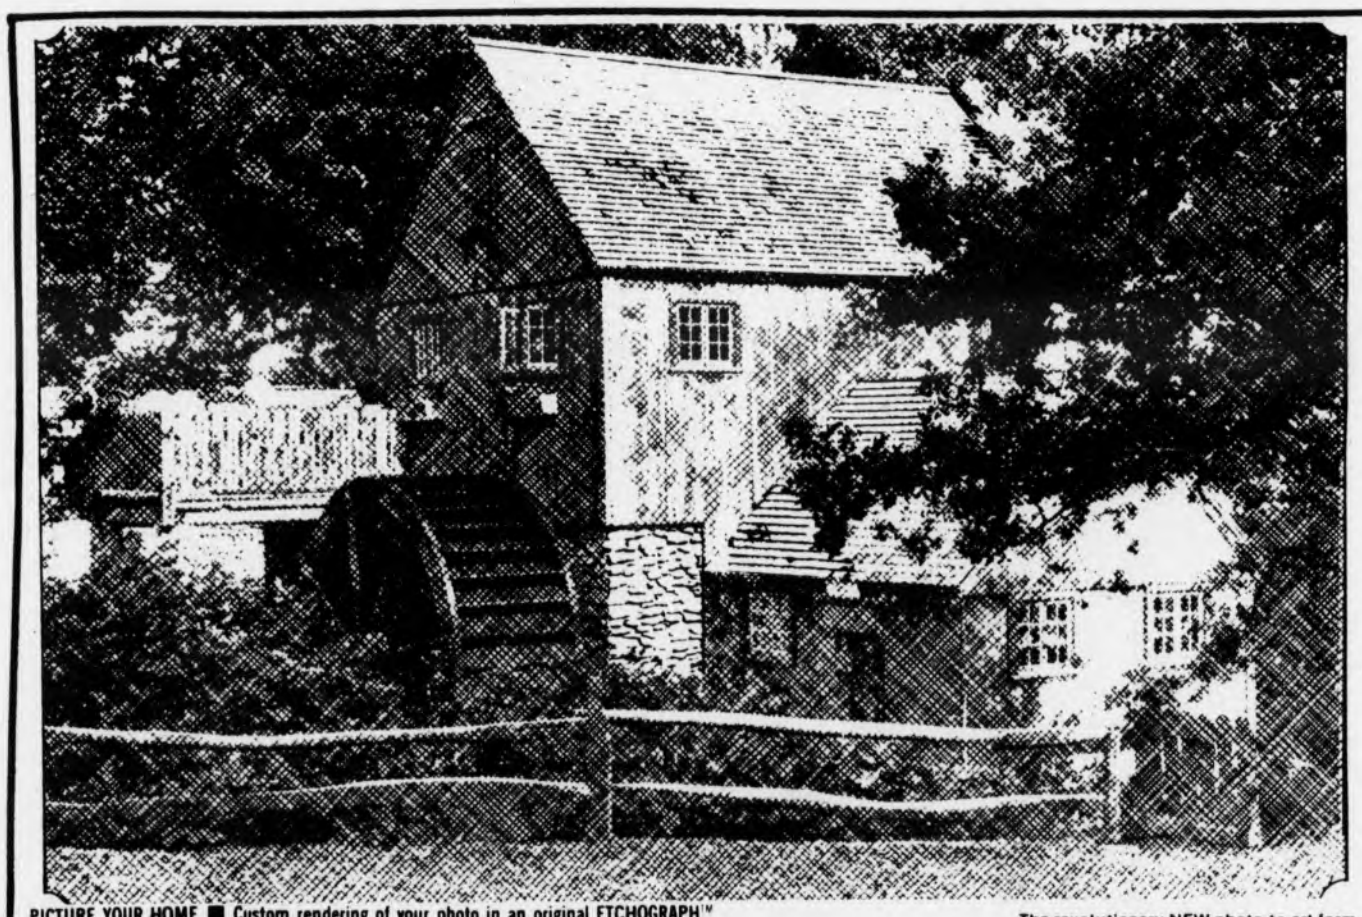
One of the legends about St. Patrick is that he used shamrocks to teach converts the Trinity because of their three leaves. Florists who sell tiny clay pots of shamrocks in this country usually offer seedlings of a white flowered clover. Tradition has it that when the day's revelry ends, the shamrock should be removed from the lapel and placed in the final drink of the day. After drowing the shamrock, toss it over the left shoulder for good luck. And who would think of saying the Irish aren't superstitious? They're also famous for the toasts they offer in a soft Irish brogue, for who hasn't heard their poetic: "May you have warm words on a cold evening, a full moon on a dark night and a smooth road all the way to your door." Many a son of Eire will end a holiday meal with

IRISH MIST COFFEE



Into a heated cup or a stemmed goblet, pour one jigger of Irish Mist whiskey. Fill the goblet with strong black coffee to within 1" of the brim. Top off to brim with whipped cream slightly aerated so that cream floats on top. Do not stir after adding cream because the true flavor is obtained by sipping the hot coffee and Irish Mist through the cream.

Living in the country is even better than it used to be. Lots of new comforts have been added—as you'll soon see when you visit The Meadows in Hingham.
This fine group of attached single family homes offers the spaciousness and fine construction of yesteryear with conveniences grandma never even contemplated. There are kitchens with sunny breakfast bays . . . lots of fireplaces . . . vaulted and tray ceilings . . . large private courtyards . . . 2-car garages . . . swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. The location, on wildflower-strewn meadows in the lovely town of Hingham, is idyllic.
Two and three bedroom homes range from $155,000 to $210,000 during our opening period. The furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take Exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment.

Local real estate market is booming...

"It's a wide open business," says Connie Mitchell, of Jack Conway Realtor's Scituate office. "Since there is a chance the interest rates will go no lower, people are coming out to buy."

Conway's Cohasset branch manager agrees with Mitchell. In fact, Muriel Desmond adds that business is up "150 percent" from the same period last year.

"A lot of people held back to see if the interest rates would drop lower. They have decided that they won't, at least for a while, and they are ready to buy now," she said. Desmond agrees with Mitchell that their main problem is a lack of listings to offer these prospective customers. The buyers are there, Mitchell insists, but there is minimal housing construction and not enough homes to offer home-seeking clients.

"Buyers are making up their minds more quickly. Buyers are aware that demand is greater than supply and there are fewer selections of homes," she adds.

The Cohasset branch manager agrees homes in Cohasset exclude buyers other than those in the high income bracket.

"It's too bad," she says. "We see a lot of very young couples with one or two children who are on a limited income. But homes in Cohassest are not priced that low. It's too bad. Many of these kids were brought up in this area and would like to remain here, but they are being forced out of the market."

Often times, the only alternative for the young families is to "settle for less," she says. They end up purchasing a small home in need of repairs, put in a few years of "sweat equity," hope they can resell the property and make a profit to put down on a better home.

Julie Guild of the Dean and Hamilton Gallery of Homes says the bulk of their business is in "executive transfers." Company executives who transfer from one area of the country to this area often find Cohasset a unique community in which to live.

Business for Dean and Hamilton has definitely picked up this year, although Guild said even the previous year was better than when interest rates were set at 16 and 17 percent.

Petersen Realtors agree the market has improved this year from the past few. Barbara Froio, sales manager of that office, said the volume of sales this year is up from last year, although prices have remained stable. She advises that now is the time to buy. "The rates appear to be stabilized. I would not tell anyone to wait to see if the rates get lower. They could also get higher," she says. "The biggest factor in today's market is that the price of the homes has not inflated this year, which is what happened the last time the interest rates fell (about two years ago from near 20 percent to about 14 percent). Now is the time to buy."

Froio said because of the increased business, the sales staff has increased their work hours, especially during the weekends. Although the realtors are more active, there are no immediate plans to expand the staff, although that could be a future possibility, she adds.

In Scituate, the Conway office has definite needs and plans to expand its sales staff. Mitchell, office manager for 16 staff members, said the office is presently looking for more realtors to join the firm.

She also said in Scituate there is a variety of home prices to offer the prospective buyer. Recently, she says, there was a listing for a $45,000 home which was sold the same day it was offered, and the office received four more offers on the following days.

A spokesman for Lucy Locke Gallery of Homes in Scituate says the business is "going great guns" thanks to the lower interest rates and momentary stabilization of the economy. Although Locke, who has operated the Scituate Harbor business for almost 40 years, experienced a good year last year, secretary Sandy Loring predicted a better sales year in 1983.

Because the business has been a fixture in Scituate for so long, the office handles many referrals and second- and third-time customers. Despite gloomy economic times the past few years, the Locke office has thrived, she says.

Loring notes that the success of the real estate market effects other economic aspects of the local community. Persons who buy from the Scituate office often come back for referrals regarding oil companies, lawyers, doctors, plumbers and others.

A thriving local real estate market will positively affect the entire community, Loring said.

The Locke office has experienced a steady flow of clientele interested in purchases of condominiums. Many older or single persons inquire about real estate which requires minimal maintenance. Quite a few persons have specifically asked about the condominium market in Scituate, she said.

Although Scituate realtor George Kelly agrees there is a need for condominiums in Scituate, he does not see a market for such high-priced units as is being proposed for the Dreamwold, Simms Yacht Yard, and the Scituate Country Club properties.

According to Kelly, the condo units proposed now for Scituate will be priced from about $150,000 to $250,000. That price, he proclaims, is "super expensive" for this community.

"Even though these units are being built in some expensive neighborhoods, I can't see how they will sell such expensive stuff," he says. "I don't see the demand for such expensive housing in Scituate, although they may all prove me wrong."

Kelly, a self-employed realtor for more than 30 years, said condos are being sold in Duxbury and Plymouth for less than $100,000, and he can't see how buyers will purchase similar but more expensive housing in Scituate.

He says the decrease in interest rates has helped his business this year.

In one recent case, a young couple who bought a home through his office last year, inquired about refinancing their 16 percent mortgate at this year's lower rate. The couple would refinance a $30,000 mortgage, and within six months they would be saving $100 a month on the mortgage, Kelly says. The realtor has been hunting for a local bank which will guarantee the couple a fixed, 30-year interest rate.

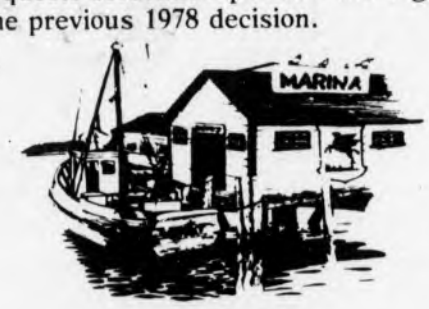
Kelly says he has also worked extensively with the Cape Verdean community in Scituate. He said they are among the "hardest working people anywhere," and often refer him to other relatives and friends after he has assisted them in the purchase of a home.

"The way I figure it, helping someone buy a home is a long-range investment both for the buyer and the realtor," Kelly says.

Civil Service question on the town warrant

After being informed that the police chief Civil Service ballot question was illegal, petitioner Richard Barrow submitted a proposed warrant article requesting petition of the legislature to repeal the 1978 decision which took the chief's position out of Civil Service.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson ruled last week that a proposed ballot question that asked voters to place the police chief's position back into Civil Service, was illegal. Henderson ruled the petitioners did not follow proper steps, according to state law.



He said that in order to entertain the motion, selectmen, through a town meeting vote, must petition the state legislature to put the town back under Civil Service rules for the chief's position.

After learning the decision from selectmen last week, Barrow submitted a proposed warrant article which requests selectmen petition the legislature to repeal the previous 1978 decision.

Although selectman Mary Jane McArthur asked the board to include the proposed article in the town meeting warrant, selectmen Henry Ainslie and Rocco Laugelle said they wanted to talk to town counsel about it before approving it for the warrant. However, Tuesday, the Mariner learned it will be included in the warrant.

Later that night, the advisory board unanimously recommended against the Barrow proposal. The board was against transferring to the police chief the rule-making and disciplinary powers now held by selectmen.

BOOSTERS SHIRTS

The Cohasset Boosters Club announces the sale of Izod-type sport shirts in navy or white with "Cohasset" embroidered in fancy script. These are a good buy at $12, espicially for Mother's or Father's Day gifts.

Proceeds from the sale of the shirts and navy V-neck sweaters help defray the cost of equipment and clothing needed for school sports which are not part of the regular athletic budget.

Contact Carol Meers, 383-1587, for purchases or information.

SCHOOL CANDIDATES' NIGHT

The PSO will sponsor a school committee candidates' night Thursday, March 24 in CHS room 107. Refreshments at 7:30 p.m., meeting begins at 8. Candidates Diana Kornet, Jack Langmaid and Judy Volungis will be asked to respond to prepared and impromptu questions.

High school students attend voter registration assembly

A voter registration assembly was held for 18-year-old juniors and seniors March 8 in the high school auditorium. The assembly was co-sponsored by the high school social studies department and the Cohasset League of Women Voters. During the assembly 38 new voters were added to the Cohasset voter list.

Edward Sheehan, chairman of the social studies department, served as master of ceremonies. Speakers during the assembly were Janine Broadhurst, voter service chairman of the League, Marie Caristi, co-president of the League; John Slater, Cohasset assistant town counsel; and Charles Marks, Town Clerk.

Caristi spoke of the dangers of voter apathy in the United States. She said "you, our new voters, are a critical part of our electorate."

Slater explained the rights and responsibilities of 18-year-olds in our free society. He traced the background of the 26th Amendment to the Constitution — the act which gave 18-year-olds the right to vote.

Marks assisted interested, eligible juniors and seniors in filling out the necessary voter registration forms.

Legal fees abated

School Supt. Eugene Crowell said the school dept. appreciates that the town counsel's office of Thaxter, Beckwith and Henderson gave their time to help the department with the drugs and alcohol policy. The firm submitted a bill for $3,900 but "for all the time given by the firm, it could have been doubled," said Crowell.

Here are the results of the PSO survey

The following is a copy of the Cohasset Parent School Organization's survey results:

In mid-February, the PSO conducted a poll of approximately 800 parents regarding educational vs. budgetary priorities for the Cohasset school system. A questionnaire was mailed to parents and also printed in the local press; 210 returns were received and tabulated with the following results.

The returns indicated a high level of interest in the issues. Many of the respondents indicated how strongly they felt about their preferences, and over half of the returns contained extensive comments and additional suggestions. These fell into three main categories: 1) statements supporting or emphasizing the priorities favored, 2) comments expressing displeasure at the choices offered, or offering additonal options, and 3) comments expressing the need for more information on the subject covered.

A number of respondents felt that the options offered were unpalatable, or represented too narrow a viewpoint. A total of 35 additional options were written in; those receiving 10 or more write-ins were as follows: reduce administrative staff, reduce non-teaching staff, and reduce/review/renegotiate teachers' salaries.

Other comments, in order of decreasing number of write-ins, were: better teachers/elimination of ineffective teachers, use of fundraisers, fewer workbooks, lease part of Osgood School for town offices, use more teacher assistants and fewer teachers, reduce or consolidate special education, reduce utilities and heat, charge fees for AP courses, better or different utilization of staff, obtain grants, less busing, and fewer field trips.

Also, cut gifted programs, four-day school week, eliminate industrial arts, change entrance date for kindergarten, use zero-base budgeting, offer early retirement incentives to staff, go to a regional high school set-up, reduce elitist sports, enlist talents of the community, sell off unused school items, larger class sizes where classes are small and sell services.

The school superintendent formulates the budget on a year-to-year basis and the school committee votes on it accordingly.

1. Do you favor:

A. Continuation of present practice of large budget reductions on a year-to-year basis? 45

B. Establishment of a five-year plan to implement major changes that would permanently reduce costs? 136

2. Assuming major cuts occur in September 1984, indicate your priorities of most to least desirable action:

	Most	Least
A. Close Osgood School	88	72
B. Lease part of Osgood School	128	31
C. Lease jr. high wing, realign grades 7-8 in elementary schools	85	80
D. Increase class size from the current 25-to-1 avg.	29	128
E. Reduce programs, curricula, cut h.s. electives, elminate "open space" and enrichment classes all levels.	44	111
F. Offset budget decreases by fees for sports, extra-curricular activities, arts enrichment and supplies.	109	47

3. Assuming major cuts occur, do you think that the effects could be offset by:	Yes	No
A. Greater use of computers	102	60
B. Cooperative classes, etc. with neighboring school systems	111	68
C. Use of educational and cable TV	91	85
D. Curriculum to stress only "three R's"	59	117
4. Would you support a position at Town Meeting to use surplus revenue or free cash to decrease the school deficit?	110	70
5. In order to provide necessary funds to maintain the standard of Cohasset education would you vote to override Prop. 2½ at Town Meeting?	68	116
If you answered "Yes,"
A. Would you attend Town Meeting and support question #5 ?	65	29
B. Would you actively work to override Prop. 2½?	54	40

"The past two years have found me with little time to cultivate an active social life due to a rapid growth in my career and professional life. Since my day is long work-wise and my job is demanding – there is little time left to seek the social life that I would like. That's where Together came in. I respected their honesty, integrity and professionalism from the very start. As a result, I have met several people with the same interests and goals in life – not to mention the great times we have shared. Indeed, Together has filled a very important part of my life."

"I'm a busy professional and both my career and social life are important to me. I don't go to bars and I don't date people I work with. For me, Together has been an economical and time-saving way of meeting other compatible single adults. The counselors are sincerely concerned with introducing me to the kind of person I would like to meet. I recommend this service highly."

LIBRARY INFORMATION LINE

Q. Do you have a book about Thomas Jefferson's black mistress?

A. The patron was sure the book existed, but did not know the author or title. We looked in the subject catalog for a biography of Thomas Jefferson. One of the catalog cards referred to Sally Hemings. We could also have looked through an encyclopedia article or biography of Jefferson. We looked for Hemings in subject guides to books without success.

Then we recalled that a novel had been written about her. We looked in Wilson's "Fiction Catalog" and found the novel, "Sally Hemings," by Barbara Chase-Riboud (1979). "Library Journal" said of this novel, "If it indeed existed, the relationship must have been much as the author depicts it in this fine first novel: a mixture of love and hate, of tenderness and cruelty, and of freedom and bondage. The book is well researched, well written, insightful, and entertaining. Highly recommended."

The subject of Jefferson's relationship with Sally Hemings is controversial. See Fawn Brodie's biography, "Thomas Jefferson, an Intimate History" (1979), and Virginius Dadney's book, "The Jefferson Scandals, a Rebuttal" (1981).

Q. Where does the expression "to get one's goat" come from?

A. The "Morris Dictionary of Word and Phrase Origins" (1977) says "get your goat, meaning to become fretful or irritated because of the actions of another person, comes from the race track. It used to be fairly common practice to stable a goat with a thoroughbred, the theory being that the goat's presence would help the high-strung nag to keep its composure. If the goat were stolen the night before a big race, the horse might be expected to lose its poise and blow the race."

"The Dictionary of American Slang," 2nd edition (1975) says the phrase came into use in the U.S. about 1908 and became common around World War I.

Partridge's "Dictionary of Slang and Unconventional English" (1970) says the expression may come from the French prendre la chevre, to take the milch-goat, often the poor man's sole source of milk.

"The Oxford English Dictionary" (1933), the ultimate authority on history of English, does not have "get your goat," but the "QED Supplement" (1971) says the phrase is original U.S. slang, and gives some early examples.

Q. Where can I find statistics on the frequency of use of the letters in the English alphabet?

A. The patron was studying computers and cryptology but had not found the answer in books on these subjects. The librarian suggested the "Encyclopedia Brittanica" article on cryptology. This encyclopedia is most erudite on technical topics. The patron read ten pages of dense material before coming to a list of "the following relative frequencies in descending order of the plaintext letters (based on a count of 50,000 letters of governmental plaintext telegrams and reduced to 1,000 letters): E, T, N . . ." and the list ends with K, J, Z. (Watchers of extra-terrestrial beings may take special note.) The librarian does not have to know what cryptology is, or understand this article, to know that sometimes, even for technical subjects covered by a vast specialized literature, a good place to look for answers is a subject dictionary, handbook or encyclopedia.

Q. When is a young man addressed as "Master?"

A. Elizabeth Post's "The New Emily Post Etiquette" (1975) says boys may be addressed as "Master" until age six or seven. They are addressed without a title from that age until graduation from high school at which time they take the title "Mr."

"Miss Manners' Guide to Excruciatingly Correct Behavior" (1982) does not mention the use of "Master." So perhaps it would not be ill-mannered to drop this usage.

Q. What is the meaning of "wherefore" in the line "Romeo, Romeo! Wherefore art thou Romeo?" (Shakespeare, "Romeo and Juliet," Act 2, Scene 2, line 33)?

A. "The Oxford English Dictionary" (1933) gives the history of English words. In this case, "wherefore" has the archaic meaning "why." In other words, "Why are you Romeo of the rival Montague family instead of someone I might be free to love?"

Q. A librarian at Lawrence University in Wisconsin wrote to say a faculty member is writing about a 19th century actor who vacationed in Cohasset between 1872 and 1885. Could we identify preserved newspapers that might cover social and entertainment news of the time?

A. The Cohasset Historical Society owns all copies of "The Cohasset Cottager" published between March 1882 and March 1884. Hingham Public Library has "The Hingham Journal" on microfilm from 1850. The Crane Library in Quincy has microfilm of the "Quincy Patriot" from 1837. The Boston Public Library has microfilm of "The Boston Beacon," "The Boston Budget," and "The Boston Commonwealth" for this period. The Wisconsin librarian wrote back to say the professor was pleased to learn about these sources.

DON'T TRY TO KEEP UP WITH THE JONESES. PASS THEM.

Following trends is easy.
Setting them, however, takes a little more imagination. The kind of sixth sense that can appreciate innovation before it becomes fashionable.
Case in point: the Saab 900 Turbo. For some time, car mavens have admired its exhilarating power and performance (not to mention more mundane features like room and economy and comfort). More recently, even publications like The New York Times have seen fit to print its praises. Which may explain why now the Saab Turbo is increasingly seen pulling into the more elegant driveways of America.
Even the Joneses are starting to take notice.
But given the Saab Turbo's acceleration of 0-60 in 9.6 seconds, they'll have a pretty tough time keeping up.

DON'T TRY TO KEEP UP WITH THE JONESES. PASS THEM.

Following trends is easy.

Setting them, however, takes a little more imagination. The kind of sixth sense that can appreciate innovation before it becomes fashionable.

Case in point: the Saab 900 Turbo. For some time, car mavens have admired its exhilarating power and performance (not to mention more mundane features like room and economy and comfort). More recently, even publications like The New York Times have seen fit to print its praises. Which may explain why now the Saab Turbo is increasingly seen pulling into the more elegant driveways of America.

Even the Joneses are starting to take notice.

But given the Saab Turbo's acceleration of 0-60 in 9.6 seconds, they'll have a pretty tough time keeping up.

Murray, McKinnon take aim at Wompatuck access road

Quick reaction by state Sen. Allan McKinnon and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray will kill a proposed legislative bill which approved could lead to the building of an access road to Wompatuck State Park and to Cohasset, Scituate and Marshfield.

This time there's a bill by the circuitous route of South Boston before the state legislature which, if enacted, would construct a road off an undesignated site on the Southeast Expressway to the Park and eventually to North Scituate.

The bill, No. 5071, filed by Rep. Michael Flaherty of South Boston, has to be the most roundabout approach attempted yet.

While not designating Norwell by name, the bill provides that construction would "facilitate traffic to Scituate, Cohasset and North Marshfield, expedite vehicular traffic to and from Boston and to South Shore Hospital from those areas and relieve the unbearable traffic burden on Main St. in Hingham and the ineffectual Route 228 as well as roads presently used to reach the park."

News of the legislative bill caught Gilbert Bliss, parks director for the state Department of Environmental Management, also by surprise.

After much controversy over a year ago between Norwell and Hingham officials over the access road through Norwell, Bliss reached a compromise with the officials.

DEM would sponsor a year-round daytime traffic study to research who is using the park and where they are coming from.

Bliss had hoped money would have been available to conduct the traffic study through a special legislative capital outlay budget last spring. The bill never surfaced last year.

However, Gov. Mike Dukakis approved a budget recommendation for fiscal year 1983-84 which contains $240,000 for a traffic study and design plans to acquire land from the federal government.

The U.S. government had decided to sell 756 acres of land adjacent to Wompatuck State Park as part of a program to dispose of surplus property and raise money to reduce the federal deficit.

Bliss had discussed with federal officials a possible transfer of the land to the state for the expansion of Wompatuck State Park.

He said the area is suitable for picnic and swimming areas and an extension of a bike path.

Bliss doubts whether the traffic study would be conducted this summer because of the slow legislative process. But he feels a traffic study must be done before any access road is built.

McKinnon (D-Weymouth) said he hopes Flaherty's bill goes nowhere and after calling state Sen. Joseph Walsh, head of the Senate Transportation Committee, McKinnon said for all practical purposes the bill is dead.

The committee will not be giving the bill a favorable recommendation, McKinnon said.

"The way the bill reads I don't know if it was tongue and cheek, a practical joke or filed seriously. I don't think it is proper to put a road bill through South Boston.

"If a road is to be built it should be agreed upon by the impetus of South Shore officials and legislators from our district, not from a Boston rep, who spends so little time there. It should be us," he said.

McKinnon said there are environmental concerns to be addressed and he feels Wompatuck State Park is a recreation spot to relax in and traffic associated with it should not reflect urban-type driving.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) was very surprised to hear that Flaherty filed the bill since her bill sponsoring a road feasibility study is also refiled for this legislative year.

Murray spoke with Flaherty Monday. He said he doesn't remember why he filed it or if someone asked him to file it.

Flaherty was unavailable for comment.

Murray said the $100,000 feasibility study for the park access road cleared the House last year but died in the Senate as the legislative year ended.

Norwell representative to the Park Advisory Council Arlene Lucid was shocked to learn of the bill.

"I've attended meetings faithfully," she said, "but I hadn't been made aware of this legislation."

It is a long way from South Boston to the Park.

This is only the latest of many endeavors to gain a second access without advising Norwell.

Granted, Scituate, Hingham and even Cohasset are interested. North Marshfield? That's stretching a point. But how Norwell could be excluded entirely is a mystery. Possibly, the reason is that Norwell was confused again with Norwood. But even Norwood wasn't mentioned.

Lucid immediately set out to get to the bottom of the matter.

Apprised of the information, Norwell Selectman Margaret O'Brien, despite being on the verge of concluding her three-year term of office, was indignant.

"This affects Norwell," she declared. "Why does it emanate from South Boston and mention other towns, but not Norwell? Why weren't we informed again?"

O'Brien vowed that even in the short space of her tenure she would investigate the issue.

She also was disturbed that state legislators representing Norwell — Rep. William Flynn and Sen. Anna Buckley — had not advised Norwell of the proposed legislation and it remained for the Mariner to bring the matter to the attention of Town officials.

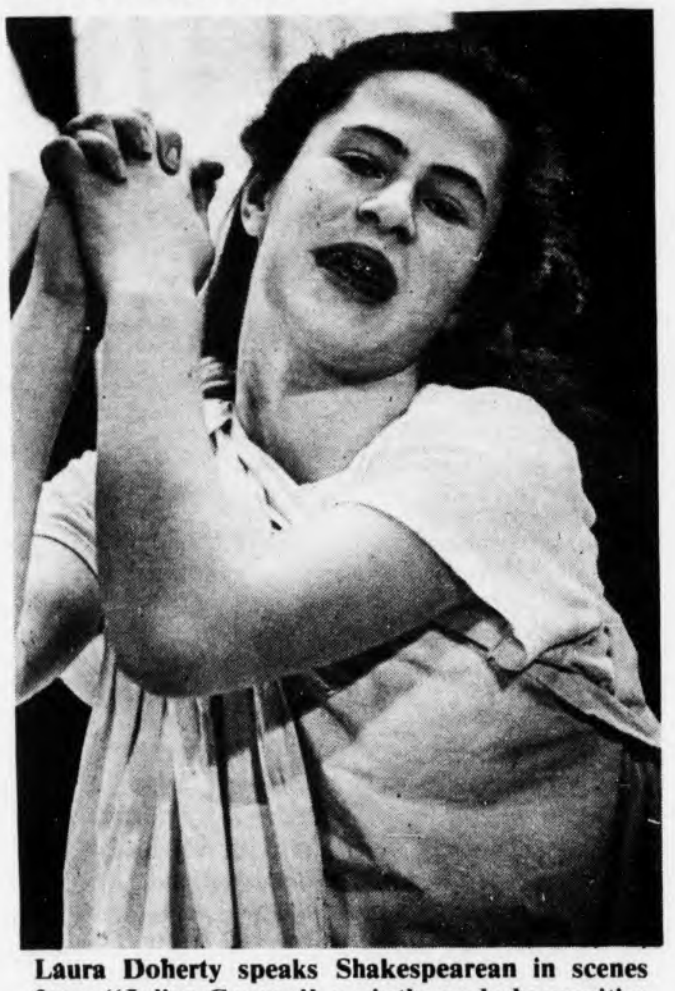
"It isn't as if we haven't made it clear to our state representatives that Norwell is vitally interested in anything pertaining to this issue," O'Brien said.

'Ides of March' remembered at CHS

By Virginia Burbank

Every year at this time for the past eight years there is even more excitement and activity in grade nine humanities classes than usual.

It's time for Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar." If you know anything about grade nine humanities, you know that there's never a dull moment, from reading classics, writing essays and laboring over grammar, to creating activities in art, music and drama.



The high point of the ninth grade experience is The Medieval Festival in the spring, which very few youngsters forget.

But now's the time for "Julius Caesar" — time again to whip the sheets off the beds, to get dressed up in togas, and after much memorization, to start sprouting Shakespearean verse with British accents.

During February and March every home in Cohasset echoes with, "Friends, Romans, Countrymen, lend me your ears." Poor Julius is again put out of his misery — again and again.

The four teachers in the humanities team, Mr. Kite, Mr. Bouchard, Mr. Graebener and Ms. Burbank, all agree that a performance for the public was long overdue. "It is not an easy task to orchestrate the movement of 130 teenagers simultaneously," said one, "for no one is left out of the original production."

Restrictions in time forced the team to choose only eight excerpts from the play. The humanities team feels "happy to see the beaming faces of the parents as they watch their youngsters move across the state so boldly and so confidently speaking in Shakespearean verse. It's worth all the extra effort we put in."

Newcomers Club meeting March 21

The March meeting of the Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club will feature demonstrations of lampshade piercing by Nancy McLaughlin and stenciling by Cottage Crafts of Hingham.

The meeting will be held Monday, March 21 at the Scituate Library.

There will be coffee at 9:30 a.m. The meeting starts at 10 a.m. Babysitting will be available at Kids Count II on First Parish Rd., Scituate. Reservations can be made by calling 545-6755. The cost is $3.00 per child.

Any newcomer to the area is welcome to attend.

Olive Leslie, an artist on china

By Peg Norris

Just the act of walking into Olive Leslie's studio on High St. is a surrender to the senses: the mixture of alcohol, tinting oil, and turpentine; a panoply of color and design; the murmur of female voices probing, consulting, advising; and everywhere, the excitement that creativity imparts to its environment. Ironically, until a recent interview on Channel 4 Evening News, Ms. Leslie and her china painting were virtually unknown in Norwell, despite her nine years' residency here. Until a few weeks ago, no "native daughter" had ever taken a class from her, although hundreds of students from far parts of the country have sought out her expertise. Now in her 74th year, she is receiving some long overdue local attention.

It all began when a pupil called Channel 4 to encourage the station to film Olive Leslie and her studio. The idea was enthusiastically received. One Monday, the station called to say that they would be there four days later. A woman from Falmouth who had seen the feature was one of many who has contacted the studio to arrange for lessons. As she began her first lesson last Wednesday, she said, "I was thrilled to find someone to teach me how to paint on china."

The novice in the field might well ask what china painting actually is. Leslie explains: " 'Ceramics' is the generic term for the whole field, whether it is making commercially the white knobs that one sees on telephone poles, the pottery taught in little studios, or painting with colors that sink into imported china." This last category, or "overglazed decoration on porcelain" is Leslie's specialty. A powder is made into a paste with tinting oil and meticulously applied to ceramic tiles or china (Limoges, Lenox, Bavarian imports) following previously sketched designs. "Don't ever trace a pattern," the new student is advised. Leslie develops each pupil as an individual. She doesn't want the student to copy her. Instead, she assesses her needs, whether it be instruction in sketching, color sense, etc. Then she works with those needs and develops inherent talent. A natural teacher, Leslie combines the theoretical and practical aspects of the art as she coaches her new pupil in her first sketch: "You must follow the natural lines of the leaf, give it the same strength it has in nature."

Because the studio is a combination of new and experienced students in the same class, one often hears a helpful exchange among them. "I love to hear one student explain a technique to another," Leslie confesses. "It proves she really understands what I have taught her."

Having run workshops in Colombia and Canada, as well as throughout the United States, Leslie has had a wide variety of students, many of whom are now teaching the art form themselves. "I was thrilled to be invited to Bogota to teach some students who had been active in my studio in Boston (where she had a studio for some 30 years on Beacon Street). With my basic Spanish and their basic English, we got along well."

When lecturing in this country in the 50's, Leslie discovered how unusual her versatility and scope in the field are. Others would over-specialize, and become known as "the rose lady" or the "corn flower lady." Leslie, in spurning such a narrow perspective, has constantly worked in new directions, along the way garnering many prizes in international china painting.

Leslie's goal is to make each piece "perfect, yet alive," and the display cases that line the studio are filled with examples of just such work. She claims to be the only one in the country doing "luster picture painting," a technique which demands using a different brush for every color. Since the colors don't appear until the piece is fired, if you pick up the wrong brush you don't know about your mistake until it is too late. Terms slip off her tongue like "raised paste," "raised enamel," "silver luster," "luster resist," and "acid etched gold." An untrained eye, while not always appreciating the technical aspects, can certainly admire the results.

Versatility is central to all aspects of Olive Leslie's life, as well as her art. As a mother, grandmother and great-grandmother, former physical education major in college, water-front director in a camp for many years, fencing instructor, furniture builder and handiwoman, it is apparent that this is a woman of many talents. With characteristic directness, Leslie sums it all up by saying, "What ever I've tried has come easily, even the china painting. I started painting when I was first married; my mother-in-law gave me my basic training and the only formal education in the field I have had. Fifty-three years ago, when I found I needed to support myself, I began teaching. I charged $1.00 a lesson in those days! My only goal then was to feed and clothe my children."

Those 53 years of teaching experience have given her many insights into the art and joy of teaching. "My deepest pleasure is the satisfaction that comes from communicating." Helping a student move from the proverbial, "I can't draw a straight line," to proficiency in drawing and painting, a pride in her work, is a process Leslie deeply enjoys. Some of her pupils have been with her for 30 to 40 years. "The only problem with being on a pedestal as a teacher," she admits, "is that it hurts when you fall." One gets the feeling that such a comedown doesn't happen often in this studio.

That remarkable adaptability that has characterized her life is apparent in Leslie's attitude toward the aging process. "I have a sense of my own limits. I know I can't run to the mountain edge any more, but I can still walk there. I discovered the joys of sneakers recently (bright blue Nikes) for work, but I still love high heels when I dress up. Above everything else, I've enjoyed my life." Perhaps that combination — versatility, creativity, and the ability to enjoy — is her secret, not only to artistic success, but to eternal youth.

Kate Logar, turns teaching into a day care business

By Claire McDonough

What do you do if you're a Boston school teacher and Proposition 2½ causes you to lose your job?

If you're Kate Logar, you join forces with your sister and start your own school, "Stepping Stones Child Care" of Hanover.

This school provides day care and pre-kindergarten services to South Shore children.

Kate, though, is an old hand at snatching gain from the jaws of bane, so to speak.

Born in West Roxbury Kate was a live-in student at the now defunct Newton College of the Sacred Heart. ("That and contact lenses were the best things my parents ever gave me!") where she majored in English.

During the October of her sophomore year, a group of light-hearted Boston College students staged a "panty raid" at Kate's dormitory. After the local police had rounded up all the Eagles (B.C.'s nickname) they could lay hand on, the girls returned to bed.

The silence was broken by a plaintive, "Please, girls, you've gotta give me something to take back!"

Investigation revealed one lone student who had hidden in the bushes.

Did she throw him anything?

"Of course not," she will tell you primly. "Underwear was much too expensive."

Later, when her roommate arranged a blind date for Kate at a Christmas dance at the college, her escort's voice was immediately familiar. However, having fallen at first glance for his "beautiful blue eyes," Kate forgave him his transgressions on the spot.

Three and a half years later, Kate married and reformed the miscreant. She and Attorney James Logar have lived happily ever since, and along the way have produced five year-old Nat, and nine month-old Elizabeth.

Also along the way, young Kate acquired some impressive credentials. Following graduation from Sacred Heart, she took education courses at Boston State and received certification for teaching.

While still taking courses, she started substitute teaching at a public school in Brighton.

"I taught," she will tell you, "the most incredibly bright, obedient Chinese students."

She was later transferred to a school in Roxbury and she loved it.

"These were inner city kids, and many of them were Spanish-speaking. I started learning Spanish from the kids, so I could teach them English. I got so far into it that Jim and I spent a month at Columbia learning Spanish."

In addition to Spanish Kate took by her own reckoning, "a lot of courses," including photography .

There were many opportunities, she recalls, to get involved, to "go beyond just teaching in class."

Transferred to the Agasee School in Jamaica Plain, Kate continued to study, and to improve her skills.

"I really loved teaching. The more I got into it, the more I loved it. The more classes I took, the more I wanted to take.

"It's funny, because I had always assumed that I would teach until I had my first child, then I would live in a dream house with a little white fence around it. Jim would go to work, and I would stay home.

When the time came, however, Kate found that she had become addicted to teaching.

"I just couldn't stop. Fortunately, I was able to find good day care. If I didn't have Patti O'Brien to take care of Nat and Elizabeth I wouldn't be able to work outside the house."

"Teaching," Kate points out, "gives you the best of both worlds. You have long vacations with your kids, and your hours are good."

Proposition 2½ shattered Kate's dream world.

"I never imagined," she insists, "that I would be let go after 11 years of teaching. I knew I was a good teacher, and I had tenure. Being riffed was the hardest experience I have ever had. I was devastated. The only consolation was that I knew I wasn't being fired because of lack of ability. There was red tape, court cases, political problems... and 2½. I stood in the unemployment line with a lot of other teachers.

"The wounds are still there, but from the ashes..."

From the ashes arose Kate Logar, enterpreneur.

For a while she and her sister Jane thought of baking croissants.

"We like to eat them, and I had learned how to cook them. We took courses and went to SBA seminars.

"We decided against croissants, because the rents and ranges were incredibly expensive, and we didn't want to get up at 4 a.m. or work every weekend."

Their second alternative was a children's specialty shop, but investigation revealed that "only grandmothers can afford to shop there. Most people buy their kids' clothes in places like Marshalls."

Meanwhile, Kate was filling her spare time working at Kids Count II in Scituate and she loved it.

"I started to develop ideas of my own for group day care. We surveyed the towns between Bourne and Scituate and found there was definitely a need. Then we started looking for space."

The sisters found an ideal location in the closed Salmond School at 188 Broadway in Hanover.

"It's a beautiful old brick building. We rented two nice sunny classrooms and an office in the front of the school.

The two young women went to work with a will. The School Department loaned them most of the furniture they would need, and Kate and Jane donated toys. In addition, they haunted yard sales and shamelessly accepted donations from friends and relatives.

"Before we could get a license from the Office for Children there was a lot of work to do. We had tests run for lead paint and wrote proposals, programs, etc.

"We opted for a full day child care with a pre-school program built in.

"A lot of parents get nervous when they hear "day care" because they think the kids will just run wild. It's not like that at all.

"We serve 2 year, nine month-olds through age five and we include reading readiness and math, manipulation, fine and gross motor skills.

"We are licensed for 20 children, and right now we have 13 on various schedules and there are quite a few signed up for September. We opened in January, and we had kids there from day one.

"It is," she smiles, "kinda neat. These children are learning their alphabet and numbers concepts. They are learning to socialize, to be with other children. Some of them are with us all day, and some come for morning or afternoon. The need for child care definitely exists on the South Shore.

"It's encouraging to get feedback from the parents. They say they feel comfortable with us, and they find the classrooms nice and bright. It's a good environment for kids.

What are her plans for the future?

"Oh, I want to stay in child care. I'd like to get my Masters in Early Child Care from Bridgewater State — I'm working on it now.

"Jane and I would like to share directorship with a qualified staff under us. We'd like to be resource of consultants for people who need day care.

"Most of all, though — and this probably won't happen till they're in college — I'd like to have two children who think their mom did a neat job with them even while she was running a business. I'd like them to think they have the neatest mom and dad on earth."

David Brega, fine arts professional

By Joan Pinkham

Blessed with keen eyes, a sharp mind and clever hands, at age 34, David Brega has successfully made the transition from a "Sunday painter" to a full-time professional in the fine arts.

When you have a family to support, the decision has to be made as to whether you will spend the rest of your life painting commercially and only for yourself nights and weekends.

"AT THE FAIR" by David Brega A "trompe-l'oeil" painting of a ticket booth at the Marshfield Fair

"The struggle is on," says the local artist of the decision he and his wife, Lynn, made two years ago to break away from the business world and become independent.

To see Brega's works and hear of his achievements, one gets the feeling the "battle" clearly is being won.

In a comparatively short time they have acquired an antique Cape and a new son to occupy the nursery. Jess was born the 24th and joins their daughter, Kate, who is four.

Settling back in a comfortable chair in the former cobbler's shop located in the rear of their weathered, shingled home, the young artist is surrounded by the tools of his trade in what has been transformed into a studio.

Here, Brega has done 12 paintings in the past year, (10 of medium size and two of major size), some of which have sold for five-figured sums. "They sell as fast as I produce them."

For instance, the acrylic entitled "September," a first place winner at the Duxbury Arts winter juried show, was sold before the show opened to a Pembroke couple for three thousand dollars.

Art collectors are eager to acquire Brega's paintings, most of which take the form of still life works known as "trompe-l'oeil," (pronounced "tromploy"). Translated from the French, it means "to fool the eye."

One particular painting, one of five purchased by a young New York financier who is a multi-millionaire, is called "Grade One" and will be reproduced for the 1983 children's edition of Colliers Encyclopedia, together with an article written by Brega explaining what "trompe-l'oeil" is. Next year, another painting and text will appear in the adult edition of the encyclopedia.

Brega is quick to acknowledge those who have helped him and his twin brother (also an artist), to develop the talent in which they have dabbled since they were kids. Both are graduates of the Paier School of Art in New Haven, where they studied under Ken Davies, a noted "trompe-l'oeil" artist who was instrumental in helping the twins find their way into that field and the art world. They also spent a year at San Francisco Art Institute.

Aided and abetted by his parents and his wife of 10 years, Brega is quick to point out how others have helped in introducing him to the South Shore area, such as neighbors, the George Osbornes. He calls George his "prop man," ever helpful in aiding Brega in his continuous search for props to be used as background in his set-ups.

Hardly a day goes by when Brega, his neighbors, or family don't come up with such finds as an old post card, painting, an old board, footstool or sugar bin; the stool, old card and spool of Clark's thread, part of a grouping for another painting.

The accompanying painting entitled "At the Fair" came about as a result of Brega's visit to last August's Marshfield Fair. The ticket booth, old magazine cover and tiny pitcher discovered by Osborne are simple artifacts cleverly grouped and painted to certainly "fool the eye."

John Meile, a man with style(s)

By Moira McCarthy

John Meile has style, that is music style and salon style.

On the South Shore, people admire John Meile's style of running his own business, Mr. John's Hair Salon of Scituate. But around the world, John Meile's swing style music has been laughed to, danced to, and remembered for more than four decades.

Meile first discovered music at nine years-old, when his parents encouraged him to play the accordian. ("They're from Italy," he said)

But when he heard Benny Goodman on the radio, something clicked. "I knew then I wanted to play a reed instrument."

So Meile took up the clarinet.

By the time he was 16, he was playing clarinet, flute, soprano sax and tenor sax. Music was his life. "I loved to play," he says. "I remember one night, I told my father I was playing at a high school dance, but I was really playing at the Imperial Hotel in Scollay Square."

Scollay Square was a district of clubs that stood where Government Center is today. "Well, he knew all along. When I got up on that stage to play, my father came in, grabbed me by the hair, and dragged me out, bodily.

"After that I played a lot of high school dances until I was of age. But Scollay Square is where I learned the trade."

When Meile graduated from Cambridge Latin High, he went on the road. "I'd go out for a few months, then come home for a few months, but I was always playing."

Meile's road tours took him as far west as California, and equally as far north and south.

Then came the Korean conflict. Meile was drafted, and sent to Tokyo to play in General Douglas MacArthur's band.

"We were based in Tokyo, but we played all over Japan." But that was just a start to the places that Meile would play.

After Tokyo, Meile joined the band on the cruise ship Arosa Sun, and toured the West Indies.

Then he joined the U.S.O. as a civilian. His first U.S.O. gig was in New York, and it was there that a pretty and talented soprano caught his eye.

Her name was Marjorie Altman.

Today she's known around Scituate as Marjorie Meile. "She has a lovely soprano voice," he says, "that's why I married her, among other things."

Together, they toured the world with the U.S.O.

"We went to Scotland, then England and France. We went to Europe, Africa, Bermuda, Turkey and Greece. And we did it all through music."

The Meiles eventually settled down in Scituate, and raised a family of talented musicians. Christopher, 23, recently earned a music degree from the University of Lowell and plays the clarinet, flute and saxaphone.

Lisa, 21, is a senior at Westfield State, and played the flute in high school.

Stanley, 18, is majoring in Communications at the University of Dayton, and will be playing trombone with his band at the Colorado Jazz Festival in April. Little Daniel, just 13, is a drummer at Gates Junior High School.

The family uses music as a way to be together, and to spread joy to others. "In the 1970s, we spent every Christmas eve playing at the Sunlight House, or another nursing home. It was a wonderful time."

Today Meile still plays three to four nights a week. "My music and my salon create a balance," Meile says. "I never get tired of work, as long as I have music."

Meile's favorite is jazz, and the audiences still love it.

"Every night I do my Glenn Miller set, and all the young people get out there and dance. Whenever I play 'In the Mood,' I always ask the older folks, 'Do you remember the Totem Pole?' "

From the accordian, to Scollay Square, to General MacArthur's band, to the Bell Buoy, John Meile has seen and played it all.

When will he retire? "Let's put it this way," he says. "As long as I can breathe, I'll be playing."

Jeanine Graf, WEZE's talk show host

By Lois Martin

Her voice is well-modulated. Her diction is clear. And "If God gave me one talent," she says, "it's talking on the telephone."

Jeanine Graf of Ferry Street in Marshfield has combined those attributes to form a career as a talk show host, WEZE's Jeanine Graf Show, Monday through Friday from 1 to 3 p.m.

She's been hosting three years, interviewing personalities/celebrities then fielding the telephone calls from listeners.

She has a background in public relations, with Air India for a while, though her husband, Daniel, is an executive with Air France.

The Grafs are residents of nine years and have two daughters, Nicole and Nadine.

Her life as a talk show host constitutes a full schedule. Her guests have included the likes of Billy Graham and Pat Boone.

The favorite recent topics of discussion on the air have been the legislative pay raises, alcoholism, and one which shocked her, the response to a show on anti-semitism.

People who've listened to talk shows may have wondered about some of the classic callers with whom quick-lipped hosts must deal. One type, says Graf, is the one who must dominate air time, who are monopolizers or use the telephone hook-up as a soap box.

But many of her calls are from first time responders to the show and the topic of the day. Not all subjects captivate the same audience.

"It's a high stress job," she said. "You have to be up. And if there's a crackpot on the line, you have to get rid of them." She was asked about the type of call, not the majority of the people, incidentally. Most people offer constructive comments to the day's debate. But there's the occasional caller who has been imbibing. She says there's a "black key" to conclude conversations when necessary.

"Thank you very much for your call," she's had to say now and then after a brief conversation. Answering the telephone on the air is risky. The host has to be ready to handle an intelligent dissertation on the topic or one that isn't an asset at all.

She was impressed with Billy Graham, "a country preacher, who offered a simple gospel message filled with love." She appreciated his apparent authenticity. And her interview with him was graciously allowed after she met him in the airport.

She thinks television is less challenging than radio. Her goals, if she pauses over them, might be to work among the Boston street people as a social service person.

Her family is rated top in her priorities..."I'm too old-fashioned to compromise."

She considers herself a "master of nothing" when it comes to musical instruments. But her family shares musical accomplishments and performances at home.

The theme though is the talk show and the use of that talent...talking on the telephone.

Michael Keenan, inventor of educational games

By Judy Foley

Michael Keenan, an elevator mechanic for Delta Elevators, came up with a new career mid-way through life in a flash, he says. In fact, the idea came to him in the shower.

The idea came — instantaneously, while Keenan was cooling off a migrane headache — in the form of a board game that could teach his kids the ins and outs of electrical circuitry.

Thus, Keenan Educational Games, Inc. was born, and the reserved, soft-spoken Hanover resident has been inventing games that teach ever since.

From that first idea, "Short Circuits," a board game of building and blocking electrical circuits was developed in 1980.

Keenan recruited the help of his five children to test and develop the game. He sat the family at the dining room table, explained his idea, and drew up a board and game pieces.

What he discovered from his wife, Sue, and children Mary Anne, now 18, Michael, 17, Joe, 16, Katie, 13, Chris, 10, and Tom, 4, was that the game was fun, requiring skill, strategy and a lot of luck. The degree of difficulty in playing depends only on the skill of the player, he says. "The engineer and the school child can play with equal delight."

An idea for a similar game, based on digital circuitry used as building blocks for computer circuits, soon followed, and "Super Short Circuits" was invented.

Keenan's games were accepted at the Museum of Science inventor's weekend last year, where he demonstrated the skill-building idea in practice.

"The most effective way to sell it is to demonstrate it," he says.

Over 600 have already been sold to vocational schools, high schools and technical schools. The National Elevator Industry Educational Program uses the game in its training seminars, and so does the Boston Edison Company. This year the Springfield Juvenile Court youth development program is getting good results from letting troubled youths have a go at it. The Kennedy Memorial Hospital in Boston is using the units to motivate adolescents with learning disabilities.

Recently Keenan demonstrated the games to a U.S. government training agency, the name of which he's not at liberty to disclose. He had a 15-minute appointment; he stayed over two hours. The most effective demonstration is given by his ten year-old son, Chris. As the youngster aptly demonstrated at home recently, he can put together any of 100 electrical circuit projects from a Radio Shack kit designed for much older students.

The older Keenan youngsters can master complicated electrical designs and have put their knowledge to work in school projects. The youngest, Tommy, 4, hasn't yet mastered the art, but he's getting there.

This year the inventor came up with another idea, based on the same principle but without the electrical components.

The latest game, "Hi-Ways & By-Ways," requires the same decision-making and strategy as the first two to build connecting "roads" on a game board, and at the same time to block an opponent's roads.

The new game is still in its prototype form, and Keenan doesn't intend to start production until more marketing surveys are complete.

"We've learned a lot from the first games," he said. "There's more to inventing than just coming up with the idea. Production is expensive, and we've made some mistakes along the way. But we're learning."

A group of students from Boston College are doing a marketing survey on the games as part of a school project. "So far, the results seem good," Keenan said.

He still works full time for Delta. "I hope some day to be able to devote all my time to this. I'm obsessed by it. I think about it constantly. I've become a colossal bore."

Meanwhile, he hinted that there's even more ideas for the future. And for sure, the whole family will continue to be involved in Keenan Educational Games.

Q. With tax time not far off, I'm aware that some dividends from utility common stocks are expected to be considered a return-of-capital by the IRS, and therefore, will receive preferential tax treatment. Which utilities are likely to qualify for this status for 1982 tax income?

A. The estimated return of capital depends on a final determination by the IRS but at this point the following are estimated percentages for 1982 dividends of a few utilities:
Consumers Power 100%, Detroit Edison 80%
El Paso Electric 50%, Pacific Power & Light 45%
Public Service of NH 100%, Virginia Electric & Power 100%

Call my office if you have a question about your utilities.

Q. The recent news that AT&T's divestiture will result in seven new regional companies that have now been downgraded by Moody's bond rating is rather disturbing. Is there a problem developing in that company?

A. The 3.1 million shareholders of AT&T are by far the largest shareholder group of any corporation. Putting them through this complex divestiture process is very confusing for everyone involved. Their annual report recently mailed to shareholders, clarifies many points, but call us if you still have questions about the stock. As for the bonds, the seven regional units must be rated on their own merit and are only slightly downgraded. No problem!

Q. I have thought that the $2000 deduction I could get on an IRA would be very helpful on my 1982 tax return, but I'm concerned that I might need the money in ten years or so and would have to pay a penalty to get it out. Is it still worth it?

A. The investment you make now in an IRA has the capability of increasing in value over ten years to the point that a withdrawal penalty after that period of time will not negate its value to you. Check with us for details.

Larry Rene Quemere, caterer who accommodates

By Jane Lane

He's a grown man with a wife and children.

Yet somehow, the fantasies of childhood have not alluded him.

Larry Rene Quemere creates parties that most of us only dream about.

Any party is a challenge to him, but Quemere's flair for the dramatic will almost certainly guarantee an event bound only by the imagination (and pocketbook) of the host.

He is not "cheap" if that is the foremost consideration of a prospective host. But give he and his staff a morsel of an idea, and they will create a party built upon the most grand illusions.

If it's paper plates and napkins you desire, Rene's, on Front Street, Scituate, will cater to your every wish, he says. But if the occasion demands silver, china and crystal, then leave it to him.

"There are times when paper plates and plastic utensils are the perfect setting for a party," Quemere says, "but there are times, especially for a formal wedding, when only china and crystal are correct."

Although Rene's Catering has been located in Scituate Harbor for a little more than a month, Rene himself has been in the catering business most of his adult life.

Before he began his own company, Larry worked for another caterer as a chef. He was working about 120 hours a week after the second chef left. When he deserted out of sheer exhaustion, he knew he could be a better caterer.

Larry decided to seek his own fortune in catering, adding his own special ingredient to the business bearing his name. He vowed he would never become too important, "too big" for his customers or staff.

Operating a successful business enterprise would always be secondary to running a personal, quality company built upon the recommendations of satisfied clients.

Larry is confident he has fulfilled that intention.

"You have to treat each job as if it were a presidential ball. Each job is special and each job takes a lot of care and a lot of pressure," he says.

"With my former employer, I saw the business become more profitable, as I watched it deteriorate. The web started to unspin. The staff changed often, which is what makes the caterer what he or she is."

Larry is very appreciative and fond of his 81-member staff including waiters and waitresses, bartenders, coordinators and movers. Without these dedicated people, Larry says there would be no business.

Who else, for instance, is willing to get up at 2 a.m. to prepare a 5:30 a.m. omelete party in honor of Charles and Diana's nuptial?

That's right.

On the morning of Great Britain's most memorable wedding, Larry and crew set out for a Waltham estate where the hostess was holding court for 40 of Boston's leading business people.

Garoed in colonial costume, the waiters and waitresses announced the honored guests as they walked into the mansion.

Larry amusingly recalls, "The guests would come through the door as the doorman would yell, "Now entering, Mr. and Mrs. So and So from the township of Cohasset, in the County of Plymouth." They would then descend about a dozen steps to the "throne room" where the King and Queen (host and hostess) were royally attired, with two handmaids (their daughters) at their side.

Seven televisions monitored the English portion of the royal event, while guests snacked on crumpets, croissants and other breakfast delicacies prepared by Rene's.

It was a marvelously extravagant event which was later described in detail by Boston society scribes.

"Where in the world, could I get employees to come to work at 2 a.m. for a party?" he marvels. "It really is the staff that makes this business work. You can hire people, but you can't ask just anyone to care about what they're doing, and to get up at 2 a.m.

"But to me, it's not even work. I never thought my own business could be so much fun. But it is. I come to work every day knowing I will have fun. And when you make someone else that happy with a party, it's just great."

Larry's employees are not simply waitresses or bartenders, they participate in the planning, too. As Larry says, preparing the food is the easiest part of being a caterer. The ideas, the planning and the actual staging are the more difficult tasks a caterer undertakes.

He describes his employees as "scavengers" with deep imaginations. If a party calls for a specific atmosphere, Larry and his counterparts will hunt second hand shops and theatrical supply stores for the appropriate costumes and decorations. Perfection is the name of the dinner game for Rene's Catering.

A while ago, Larry was asked to cater a country and western party in a client's garage. It took some preparation and master planning, but the crew designed a perfect barn background, complete with corn-stacks, brick cooking hearths and lots of straw.

Bird seed was strewn over the floor to give the garage a "barn effect."

Staff members were outfitted in denim and red check, as were the tables on which whole portions of beef were carved for the appreciative guests.

China wouldn't have fit into the scheme, so Larry sought out tin plates and dinnerware on which the fare was proudly served. Larry even found portable jails in which "unruly" guests were locked for no particular reason. Needless to say, the host has been a consistent customer throughout the years.

"The easiest part of my business is the preparation of the food. The hardest part is seeing that everything happens at the right time and that the party is happening without the feeling it is being programmed," he says.

"The responsibility of the caterer is to make the party flow. We find out what the host or hostess wants to do with a party, and it's our responsibility to do it."

Although it sounds rather simplistic, it can often be a complicated procedure. In order to coordinate hot hors d'oeuvres, with the champagne cocktails, with the reception line, with the fruit salad, Larry must often deploy certain employees equipped with walkie talkies. One person can signal when an unusually long reception line is ending, so that the champagne will be brought out in perfect time.

Perfection is the name of the game, he insists. He uses the walkie talkie system when they cater a large outside affair. The communication system makes it easier for the company to coordinate its many responsibilities, including valet parking and bar and kitchen facilities.

Larry and crew will travel throughout New England to cater anything from small birthday parties to a wedding with 500 guests. Another of his primary concerns is that his company remain accessible.

"Some caterers won't go down to the Cape for a small wedding. But we will go there or to New Hampshire, to do whatever party the hosts want," he says.

Not to namedrop, but noted attorney and Marshfield resident F. Lee Bailey is a frequent customer of Rene's Catering.

Whoever the host is, Larry says the pressure is always on for the party to succeed.

"I must have prepared thousands of omelets in my career, but every time I go to prepare one in front of the guests, I still get nervous. I guess it will always be like that," he says.

An indication of the progress Rene's Catering has made in the eight and a half years since it began, is the contract they recently signed with the Boston Red Sox. Although Larry originally turned down their request (he is not a baseball fan), he later relented and agreed to cater the food for the luxury box seats at Fenway Park. Quite an honor for the burgeoning Front Street business.

In addition to catering the luxury box seats at Fenway Park, Rene's Catering will also be handling all the food served at "The Pitcher's Mound," a private dining room situated near the luxury boxes.

"Larry does a fantastic job," said Leslie Cargill, director of group sales for the Boston Red Sox.

"He has been catering here since last year's Old Timers' Game, and we have had nothing but positive comments about the food," said Cargill.

South Shore workstyles are a potpourri

Doctors and lawyers, Norwell has aplenty. Indian chiefs are a mite scarce.

There are executive types in just about any profession and every business.

And artists. Lots of artists. And musicians. Almost as many as realtors.

But there are also some more unusual occupations.

Steve Haskell of High St., for instance, lists his as "a fencer."

Michael Miner, also of High St. is a Federal police officer.

William Ansell of Jacobs Trail is a coin collector.

There are numerous full-time fishermen, if not as many for whom it's an avocation. But Barbara Sause of Chittenden Lane lists herself as a fisherperson.

Joseph Connelly of Pine St. is a traffic specialist. They sure could use his advice on Rte. 53 and especially at Queen Anne Corner.

Edward McCarthy of Riverside Drive is an ice cream manufacturer. Name sound familiar?

Although there are many working mothers these days, there still are many who are listed as housewives and homemakers.

But you have to admire one who just put down — "mother."

Ronald Rice, graphoanalyst, hypnotist, investigator

By Lois Martin

If you saw Ronald Rice recently, maybe you were hypnotized. That's one of the things Rice does, hypnosis. But that's not all he does.

He's been a criminal investigator 25 years. He has augmented his resources with two tools, graphoanalysis and hypnosis. Though he's primarily associated with hypnosis, "a massive practice" in his office on Rte. 53, it's his skill as a graphoanalyst to which he gives more clout, more importance in his work.

Much of his work is done for defense attorneys. He's called in to help on the defense. That may call for his forensic hypnosis. That's when he takes a witness and regresses the person back to the incident, through hypnosis. While prosecutors might be thought of as employing hypnotized witnesses to help build a case, Rice says the defense hypnosis can help 'punch holes in the prosecutor's case.'

He implies that hypnosis is so simple that it can be dangerous if used by incompetents. It's what the hypnotist does with the witness once hypnosis is established that counts. And the more intelligent the person, the more easily is he or she hypnotized, he says.

Ron Rice was hired by the defense attorney of Charles Frisbie, whose trial has yet to take place. Frisbie is charged with the late October 1981 slayings of his parents on Agawam Street, Marshfield. Rice is now working on double murders in Plymouth, engaged in the defense of a man who's charged with killing a woman and her child. He's hired to investigate a murder/rape case in Brockton, an auto double fatality in Hanover.

He's big on learning about people through their handwriting. He says that written documents enable him to come up with a profile of the individual. He says there are 15 personality types and four behaviorial ones. He finds them in handwriting.

Some of his cases, about a dozen a year, are an intriguing departure from legal investigations. Believe it or not, and Rice has unambiguous remarks about activity of all kinds on the South Shore, there are women, mostly, as opposed to men, who become victims of anonymous writers of explicit love letters.

When a woman gets these, he says, she's frightened. Once she goes to the police she may be referred to him for graphoanalysis. He studies the handwritten letters and eventually comes up with a profile of the writer.

He says women usually think it's a male member of her family, a brother in law or a friend of her husband. A man usually thinks it's a co-worker.

He speaks of one case in this area where one couple, who he described as living close to 'the fast lane,' started writing to another couple for whom they'd formed sexual fantasies. The recipients of the letters, both the husband and the wife, arrived at Rice's office to have the handwriting checked. And once he'd done that and described the people who'd been doing the writing, they immediately recognized those 'close friends,' through his description.

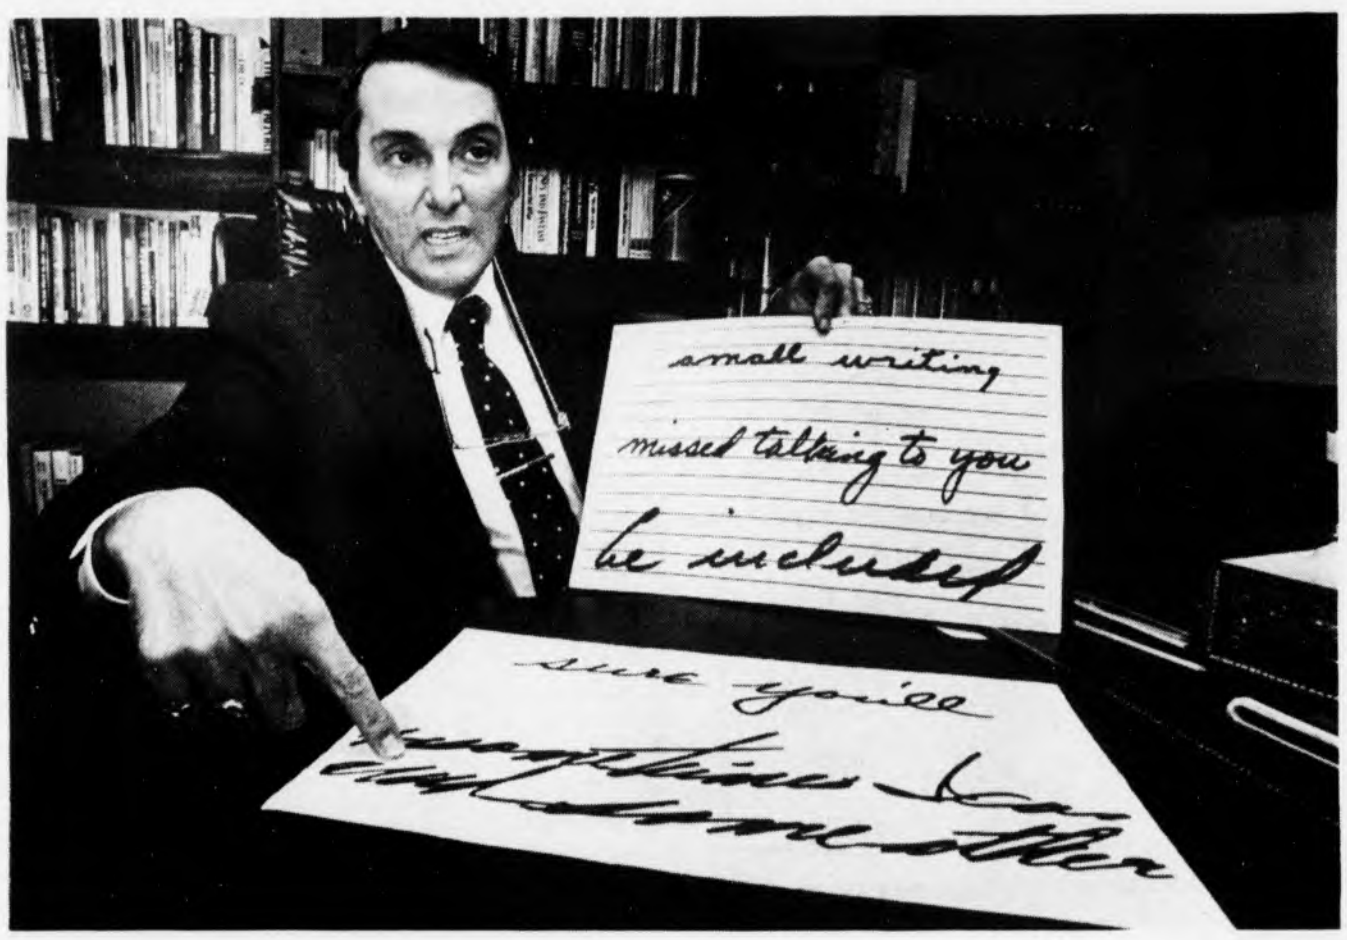
There was a corporation, another example, whose employes kept getting extortion mail. Rice analyzed it and determined a terrorist group was involved.

His business today is great but he's the first to say it hasn't always been that way. A lot of his time is spent hypnotizing people who aren't happy, who want to build confidence or meet other personality goals. He refers two out of 10 to psychotherapy for counseling.

Asked if courts and psychiatrists view him as a viable and credible practitioner of his skills, he says they do. It is seldom that he takes a witness stand on behalf of the defense. Most of his work in hypnotizing witnesses is done in advance and the most you look for, he says, is a good lead.

Rice says witnesses tend to fabricate and that has to be weeded out and quickly to get to something that is accurate and of possible value in defending the accused.

He lives in Marshfield, Ocean Bluff, and trained at Northeastern. But he says the real education is on the streets.



He usually delegates the rape, arson and narcotics cases to associates and does the murder and other crimes of violence himself. And he loves his work.

As for what type of person sends lacivious love letters, "traits may be sensuousness, imagination, lonliness." But there's no clear profile of who'll do that type of thing, he says. "We don't know what goes on in private homes."

Ron Rice says many revelations of handwriting were recognized by the likes of Shakespeare, Freud, Benet.

One might choose to think crime's salacious prevalence is limited to city life, a seamy side, a shabbiness from which suburbia bears some marvelous immunity.

Not so. Rice has a thriving business and it looks as if defense attorneys in Plymouth County will stay active and therefore so will Rice.

Jules Eskin, principal cellist with the Boston Symphony

Jules Eskin balances the rarified atmosphere of life with the Boston Symphony Orchestra with a home in Marshfield, "a spectacular part of the world."

Eskin is principal cellist with the orchestra, with which he's been affiliated 19 years. That affiliation has a lifestyle of its own, incorporating social aspects along with travel to China in the past, Japan this spring.

He may be unusual in that he is thoroughly content with his life as it is. Since he was a child, Jules Eskin knew what he wanted to do. His father played the cello and at seven years Jules began.

"I wouldn't trade my life with a doctor or a lawyer," he says. "I actually am earning a living at something I love to do."

Chamber music is his favorite. And unlike performers in some other fields, the cellist says his performance is not affected by the audience, its response. Whether it's for 10 or 1,000 people, he says, he performs primarily for himself at an exacting professional level.

Tickets for concerts are relatively expensive. That means the audience is made up of people who can afford the pleasure of the symphony orchestra.

People in Marshfield can see another part of his life if they watch the roadways for runners. He's one of them, claiming the sport/therapy/exercise as part of his desirable regimen.

His house is nestled in the woods near marshes he admires for their changing hues. And he's a man who takes pride in his woodpile and his own freshly dug clams.

That's a change for Jules Eskin. He lived in a townhouse before moving here six years ago. Before performing with this orchestra, he was with those in Cleveland and New York.

His schedule differs from that of other commuters. Sundays and Mondays are free. Tuesday there's rehearsal and an evening concert. Wednesday there are two rehearsals with one again Thursday before a concert. And there are performances both Friday and Saturday. The more than 100 orchestra members wear full regalia for evening appearances and dress suits do for afternoon ones.

Because of the concerts in other places, like three weeks in Europe and major American cities several times a year, the Marshfielder looks forward to getting back home. Even summer means an eight week season in Tanglewood.

It is, he says, "A nice life."

Jules Eskin

Frigon, teacher of counterpoint

Chris Frigon is an expert on 16th Century Counterpoint.

That, for those who are unclear on that field of expertise, is a particular kind of music.

And Frigon, a Marshfield resident, teaches it at Berklee College of Music. He's been doing that for nine years.

He says his specialty consists of "a body of rules about music" which pits idea against idea, logic.

Frigon who is also a composer and a pianist, teaches music in Vermont during the summer in theory composition.

He and his wife, a writer, selected this area as a home because it's the closest compromise they could find between his Vermont and her Kentucky.

Performances by the musician have been at Boston University, his alma mater, at Berklee, at Hammond Castle in Gloucester.

He harbors an aspiration to start a small music school himself, something that would engage his abilities and yet add a new dimension to his career.

Many local students attend Berklee and Frigon's classes. They are serious about music, encompassing all forms, including 16th Century Counterpoint.

O'Connell of the Bruins commutes to Boston Garden

By Bob Brown

There is no place like home for Mike O'Connell of the Boston Bruins.

O'Connell, the Bruins' 28 year-old defenseman, is more than happy to be playing his third season in the Boston Garden, just a 30-minute drive from Cohasset and Scituate.

O'Connell is having his most productive offensive season since joining the National Hockey League. Now that the Bruins have the NHL's best overall record, home record and top-rated defense, have added to his contentment.

"I love playing in Boston," said O'Connell, peeling off his sweaty black and gold jersey following a weekday morning practice during one of the club's recent homestands. "Playing in Boston is like playing in my backyard."

The mild-mannered Chicago native grew up in Cohasset and now lives in Scituate with his wife, Rosemary, and his eight month-old daughter.

O'Connell acknowledges that living fairly close to the arena is a convenience, as he can return home and relax following games and practices — a luxury that many players do not have.

"When you hear about those players getting into trouble (with drugs and alcohol), it's usually because they have nothing to do or nowhere to go," said O'Connell.

"But you don't see much of that in hockey anyway, because that sort of thing is not very common in Canada, and that is where most NHL players come from," he said.

The Bruins acquired O'Connell from Chicago in a trade for forward Al Secord on Dec. 18, 1980. The dark, curly-haired defenseman considers his return to Scituate as the biggest thrill of his NHL career.

"These are a great bunch of guys to be playing with on this team," said O'Connell, rubbing his bare feet on the soft brown locker room carpet. "They made the transition from Chicago to here easy for me. I was accepted right away."

O'Connell has also been accepted by the local media, which he said has always been fair to the Bruins, and the fans.

"I enjoy playing in front of people, and the fans here have been just great," said O'Connell, who has played in every game since joining the Bruins.

Harry Sinden, the general manager of the Bruins, is credited with making the trade for O'Connell.

O'Connell described Sinden positively, labeling him as "a fair man." Sinden's words for O'Connell are more enthusiastic, however, as he said that O'Connell is "a perfect player to have on your squad. He is one of our best players, but his play won't show up in the statistics. He's a good checker, he's got a great shot and he's a super passer who can carry the puck as well. Mike is a very compatible individual with this team."

In addition to linking the dealings of Sinden, such as the acquisition of Pete Peeters, the Bruins' goalie, with the Bruins' success this season, O'Connell points to the coaching of Gerry Cheevers; the Bruins' team style of play; the team's solid defense, as major contributors to the Bruins' winnings.

"He (Cheevers) has been just fabulous. He let us play our game. As long as everyone stays within the team limits, we can play our own style," O'Connell said.

"Everyone on this team plays to win and is willing to sacrifice," said O'Connell, raising his voice above the voices of his teammates and the loud rock music filling the team's dressing room at the Boston Garden.

"We have a few all-stars on the team, but most of us are just good solid players, and the record proves it."

O'Connell feels that other NHL clubs have had problems imitating Boston's concept of play, because they do not have enough of the type of players who are willing to give up their personal goals for those of the team in every game all season long.

O'Connell does not see the European style of play as an immediate threat to the NHL's top teams either, saying, "Every player on a team playing that style, like the (New York) Rangers, must be on the top of his game every night, and I don't think that's going to happen over an 80-game schedule. With our style of play, we can afford to have somebody have an off-night, because our system allows for someone else to pick up the checking or whatever is needed.

"Fortunately, we have not been faced with many off-nights this season," said O'Connell, adding that defense has been the key factor in keeping the Bruins consistent.

"Defense is what wins games for you," said O'Connell, last year's recipient of the Gallery Gods' award for the Bruins' top defenseman at home games.

"It's the same in all sports. Good pitching will always beat good hitting in baseball. In hockey, good defense and goaltending will beat a good offensive team."

O'Connell sees Quebec, Montreal, and Philadelphia as the main obstacles in the Bruins' path to the Stanley Cup this season, but added, "If you asked me now who I think will win the Stanley Cup, I'd have to say us."

O'Connell, who wears the number "20" for the Bruins, is a player who is confident in his ability to pass, check, and skate. But there were times in his career when his confidence was not as high as it is now.

The Chicago Black Hawks signed O'Connell to his first professional hockey contract for $20,000 a year in 1975. He was Chicago's third choice and the 43rd choice overall, in the 1975 amateur draft.

It took O'Connell more than three seasons of minor league play in Dallas and Brunswick before he was given his permanent promotion to the NHL during the 1978-79 season.

He played 48 games in his rookie season with Chicago and scored 26 points on four goals and 22 assists.

O'Connell played two more seasons in Chicago before being traded to Boston.

It is ironic that both O'Connell's NHL and personal lives began in Chicago and moved shortly thereafter to the Boston area.

Michael Thomas O'Connell, one of five children, and the son of former University of Illinois and Cleveland Browns quarterback Tommy O'Connell, moved with his family to Cohasset when he was young. O'Connell played sports as a youth, among them hockey, baseball and football.

"I guess hockey came the easiest for me," said O'Connell, preparing for a shower. "I'd say that I had more natural ability when it came to hockey than others, but I had to work at it too."

O'Connell's hard work intensified at 15 years-old when he began entertaining serious thoughts of playing professional hockey.

After two years of hockey at Archbishop Williams High School in Braintree, he headed off to Kingston, Ontario, to play junior hockey, where he was spotted by NHL scouts.

O'Connell has had some knee injuries during his career, but considers himself fortunate to have avoided major injuries during his career, one that he enjoys and values very much.

"I got a good start for me and my family playing hockey. I love being around the team...so what more could I ask for?" said O'Connell.

When the 5' 9", 180 pound defenseman does decide to retire, a time that he does not anticipate as coming soon, he will continue to be associated with hockey, as he will teach hockey at a school he has established in Quincy.

"I've gotten so much from the game that I feel I'd like to give something back to it, and by helping kids maybe realize the dream of playing good hockey, I'm doing that," O'Connell said.

This season it is O'Connell who is realizing the dream of playing good hockey, and he is doing it in the comfort of his own home.

Tom Noonan & the Blowouts rock on the So. Shore

By Moira McCarthy

They started out with a guitar, a symbol, an old bugle, and some silly songs.

They were known as Steve Devlin and friends back them.

Now they're known as "Tom Noonan and the Blowouts," and some say they're the hottest thing that's happened to the South Shore night life since happy hour.

In a late night jam session, they talked about their climb to success.

"I never really thought about entertaining as a career," guitarist Steve Devlin, an Abington resident said, "although I did think about becoming a one-man happy hour show." Devlin started out at the Southeastern Massachusetts University Rat, a pub at the college he attended.

"Then one night a bunch of us went to see Two Way Street (a two-man band that was popular around 1979). After that, Noonan and Witt got the idea of getting up on stage with me"

So Tom Noonan, a Scituate resident, and Robert Whittaker, a Holbrook resident, joined Devlin to become Steve Devlin and Friends. "Basically, we were copying 'Two Way Street' all the way," Noonan admitted, "but we thought we were original."

The band went on playing at the Rat, until they landed a spot at "The Ground Round" in New Bedford. "We had friends that worked there," Devlin said, "but we didn't last too long because we were a little too crazy."

But the band (they were then going by the name of Figgy) had a taste of the true spirit of entertainment. And they liked it.

Shortly after, they landed a jot at "The Mooring" in Hyannis.

"We were more than happy to be making $25 a night each. That's all we wanted," Devlin said. "And that was the first time anyone danced to us. The place went crazy." But Figgy was fired after their first night. "Dancing wasn't allowed there," Devlin added.

The band fell apart after that, and didn't reunite for two years. And by then they had to pay to play at the Ground Round in Falmouth.

"Between renting a P.A. system and giving away free pitchers of beer, it was costing a lot to play," Noonan said. And so the band split up again.

But in early 1981, things started coming together. Drummer Michael "Lumpy" Farrell left another local band, "Crisis," to join up with what is now known as Tom Noonan and the Blowouts. And they were ready to find their niche in the entertainment industry.

"I went to the Crystal Palace in Hyannis and told them I knew of a band that would pack the place," Devlin said, "and then I went home and called them to say my friend had just told them about me. We got the job, and we packed the place. Luckily, they never recognized me."

"The owner kept saying, 'And I hired them over the phone,' " Noonan added.

They stayed on at the Crystal Palace, and since then have played at the Mill Hill Club after D.J. Sullivan, as regulars at The Charley Horse in Kinston, at the Satuit in Scituate, and on Best Cruises in Boston. "Always to a full house," Devlin added.

"Basically we do what we did in college and marketed it," Devlin said. And they're a success. "Well, there are some people that hate us," Devlin said laughing.

The Blowouts recently had their first single aired on WCOD radio. "The Ballad of John" was written by Noonan about Scituate lobsterman John Ohrenberger.

It's been a long climb up for Tom Noonan and the Blowouts, but according to them, they're not through climbing yet. They may just find a way to reach the top.

Pattie Hainer, herb raiser

Pattie Hainer took her "postage stamp" size lot in Rexhame and turned it into an earthern factory for her thriving business.

She raises herbs, sells them wholesale through gourmet specialty markets. She and her family have homes in both Marshfield and Boston. About two years ago she started the business and last year she could have sold 10 times what she had available.

Her packaging is neat — small pastic containers with appropriate labels. She produces nine kinds of herbs, one of which is in "pasto," her own sauce which she makes, freezes and sells.

The herbs are dried on screens in her Boston place. She trips them by hand for the packaging and the product is called, simply "Pattie's Herbs."

Now she's ready to expand to meet the demand for her products. She'll find other people who are willing to grow the herbs and they'll "subcontract" that portion for her business.

She says it's profitable. Her crops don't need a lot of room and she knows they flourish in this area. The herbs are organically grown, however, and she's interested in the quality of her harvest.

Pattie's Herbs are found in speciality stores in Brookline, for example, or at Wilson Farms in Lexington. Hers is a business that "doesn't tie you down," perfect for family life, and successfully flowerful.

By Mike Berger and Jane Lane

When voters decide the fate of the Civil Service question at April's annual town meeting, like it or not, they are deciding the fate of Police Chief Joe Kealey.

According to Town Counsel Richard Henderson, if the question is not amended on the town meeting floor, and is voted as it appears in the warrant, Kealey will be a permanent chief, and not under Civil Service unless he retires, is dismissed, or does not have his contract renewed or passes away.

"If he continues to do a good job and his contract is renewed, he is not subject to Civil Service," Henderson said.

However, he added, if someone on the town meeting floor amends the question, so if voted takes effect immediately, "Joe Kealey will not be exempt and he will not be chief. He will go back to patrolman."

Here is the way the article reads as submitted by selectmen.

"To see if the Town will vote to instruct the Board of Selectmen to petition the General Court of Massachusetts to enact the following, or act on anything relating thereto:

"An act providing that the Office of Chief of the Police Department of the Town of Cohasset shall be subject to the Civil Service Law and Rules.

Section 1: Chapter 257 of the Acts of 1978 is hereby repealed.

Section 2: The office of Chief of the Police Department of the Town of Cohasset shall be subject to Chapter thirty-one of the General Laws.

Section 3: Notwithstanding any general or special law to the contrary, the incumbent of such office on the effective date of this act may continue to serve in such office, until the earlier of his resignation retirement or removal by the appointing authority of such town, but the provisions of Chapter thirty-one shall not otherwise be applicable to such incumbent.

Section 4: This act shall take effect upon its passage.

A three-year contract between Kealey and selectmen was signed last week.

Although selectmen appointed the former Cohasset patrolman to the position of permanent police chief last month, the final contract document was not

School budget debate at a standstill

By Mike Berger

The feeling had been brewing for weeks between the school and the advisory committees.

Neither board would budge too much in its fiscal stance.

School committee member Richard Conley said further cuts in the school budget would cut into the meat of education while the advisory board feels the school board should meet the fiscal mark of $3,790,161.

After further trimming, the school board is now some $48,000 short of the fiscal goal.

Explaining the budget cutting process to the advisory board, Supt. Crowell said he found a $149,500 excess which could be used at the end of the fiscal year, June 30.

However, last year's annual town meeting and the advisory committee required a $84,109 cut from the committee's budget.

After the required transfer from surplus to cut the $84,109 deficit, Crowell said the possible deferred spending estimate is $65,391.

After calculating further necessary maintenance and capital expenditures, Crowell found the items totaled $45,501, leaving an estimate of available funds at $19,890.

Crowell told the board he could cut another $4,000 in unemployment costs leaving the budget about $58,000 short of the advisory committee's goal.

Crowell and the committee, after prompting from the advisory baord, will use about $6,000 from the athletic dept.'s revolving fund to finance the athletic budget.

This sum is expected to come from admission revenues from the South Shore League football, basketball and baseball home games.

Beach guest permit fee continues

By Jane Lane

Even though summer may be approaching, the debate on the revised set of rules governing the issuance of beach stickers may linger indefinitely.

The discussion between selectmen and the Recreation Commission now focuses on whether guest permits should be issued this year.

Beach stickers will be issued from the Recreation Department this year.

Since the commission proposed the department issue the stickers rather than at the police station, a weekly debate has been held regarding a revised set of sticker rules.

Selectmen Henry Ainslie and Rocco Laugelle said last week the commission should continue to issue the guest permits. Selectmen have final authority over the commission policy, although it is the Recreation Dept.'s responsibility to issue the stickers.

Recreation Director John Worley said the commission feels the guest permits used by non-residents is a possible area of abuse. Also, the additional vehicles used by guests take up limited parking space legally belonging to town residents, he added.

Laugelle said he has never seen the guest permits abused by anyone and told Worley he would not allow the commission to eliminate the guest passes.

He also objected to the $2 per day fee for each guest permit proposed by the commission. In past years, he said, the permits were issued for two-week periods, for a total of $2.

According to Worley, 198 guest permits were issued last summer. The police department issued 3,800 beach stickers to Cohasset residents last year.

Commission chairman Richard Barrow said the members are against the permits because of the increased vehicle parking caused by the out-of-town

Cable license goes to American

After receiving a recommendation from the Cable Advisory Committee, selectmen voted to award a cable television license to American Cablesystems of Massachusetts, Inc.

The cable committee voted unanimously in favor of American, the sole applicant for Cohasset's cable television license. The award by selectmen would initially be on a provisional basis until the conclusion of a 30-day appeal period.

During that time, appeal of the license award may be filed with the state cable commission. That is unlikely since there was no competition for Cohasset's license.

A cable system should be operational by the summer of 1983, according to the cable committee.

Cable committee member Terence Farrell suggested the committee continue until after the cable license has been finalized and the system commences. The committee could serve as a coordinator between the cable company and the board of selectmen, the license issuing authority.

After the 30-day appeal period, the board of selectmen will be presented with a proposed 15-year cable license contract. That document will then be negotiated between the town and the cable company.

Ann Bailey, vice president of corporate development for American, assured selectmen the company will construct a system "quickly and with quality."

According to a presentation made two weeks ago by American, the company, which holds licenses in Quin-

Cohasset's week...

Automatic sprinkler system

Another article which will be submitted in the warrant would authorize the town to accept the state statute which requires that non-residential buildings larger than 7,500 square feet install an automatic sprinkler system unless there is not adequate water pressure.

The article is supported by Fire Chief Martin Dooley. The water commission also supports the article.

Chief Dooley said the statute would affect those existing businesses larger than 7,500 square feet which are constructing additions. No residential properties would be affected by the law, he added.

Selectman Henry Ainslie said that the town would not be obligated to provide adequate water pressure to any business excluded from this provision. He also noted the ruling was not designed to discourage businesses from locating in town.

Chief Dooley said the law was primarily for insurance purposes and for the protection of the owner and the persons employed there.

Chlordane banned

The Board of Health informs all concerned citizens of a recent action of the Massachusetts Pesticide Board Subcommittee.

February 23 all pesticide products containing chlordane were classified as being for "restricted use."

A decision was made to impose further restrictions on the distribution and use of these pesticides.

Chlordane now can only be sold to certified commercial applicators. The committee requires the removal of all chlordane products from access to homeowners. Those homeowners who currently possess any pesticide with chlordane in it must store it in a location where it is not accessible to children and where the container will not be accidentally damaged. They should contact the Board of Health for guidance on proper disposal. Do not bring it to the landfill or put it out with trash to be collected. This is very important.

The Department of Food and Agriculture will be conducting random inspections to ensure that chlordane is only used/sold by those certified to do so. The Department has taken a strong position on enforcement and penalties of up to $1,000 for each day of violation are authorized as per the Massachusetts Pesticide Control Act.

Residents are urged to check pesticide containers to determine if they contain chlordane.

Those who own some should call the Board of Health office. The office will provide the necessary information. Please call 383-1664 with questions.

Dogs not invited

Dogs may absolutely not participate as spectators or contestants in the Sunday, March 27 Cohasset Rotary Club Road Race By-The-Sea.

Members of the Rotary Club last week urged selectmen to warn dog owners to keep their pets away from the race which is scheduled to begin at 1 p.m. in front of town hall.

Last year, one runner was seriously injured when he stumbled over a stray dog at the finish line. Club member Fred Johansen said the numerous dogs which crowd the finish area and interfere with the race, pose a serious threat to the runners.

Selectmen said dog officer Richard Yocum will be on special alert to pick up stray dogs along the 6.2 mile race route. Dog owners are urged to keep all pets away from the race, specifically from 1-4 p.m.

The Rotary club's 7th Annual Road Race event is expected to draw 600-800 runners from throughout New England.

The stray dogs have been a constant problem at the race, selectmen agreed.

cy, Hull, Norwell, Scituate, and Milton, will spend a total of $121,000 in studio and video equipment in Cohasset.

The company will operate a studio in Cohasset Village (the location has not been finalized) and at the junior-senior high school for school department use.

The schools will receive $17,000 in portable cameras and equipment from the cable firm.

The average Cohasset cable subscriber will pay $7.95 per month for 60 channels. Premium cable services, including Nichelodeon, and Home Box Office, will cost an additional $5.95 to $8.95 a month.

Farrell said the company will freeze rates for one year, and thereafter the company must inform selectmen thirty days before rate increases are effective.

Farrell and cable committee chairman Joseph McCool agreed that American's Cohasset rates were fair and equitable compared to surrounding communities.

The fee schedule is based on the projected number of subscribers in a town, transmission costs, and the operating costs for that town.

The cable committee listed eleven reasons why it recommended awarding the license to American.

The committee visited American's systems in Quincy and Arlington and concluded the company displayed "a superior commitment to Cohasset's needs as well as superior ability to operate a comprehensive cable system."

The committee noted that because a head-end transmission will be shared with Scituate, "American will provide capable and economical service...because of its ability to share head end equipment as well as local programming and repair capability."

Selectmen voted unanimously to award the cable license to American. They also applauded the cable advisory committee for its 16 months and many hours of service devoted to selecting the cable company.

guests. The beach parking facilities were overcrowded last year, he said, and many residents and Sandy Beach Association members had to be turned away because of the filled parking lots.

Some of these parking spaces were occupied by non-residents with guest permits, he said.

Rather than issue the guest permits, the host resident should be responsible for transporting his guest to and from the beach, thus eliminating another vehicle at the parking lot, Barrow said.

Saturday morning, the commission held a special meeting with representatives of the Sandy Beach Association. The beach association sent a letter to selectmen regarding its objection to the issuance of the guest permits.

According to Barrow, about 30 persons attended the public meeting and most, excluding selectman Laugelle, voiced support for the discontinuation of the guest permits.

Another area of dispute regarding the beach stickers is whether the money alloted for the stickers should be in the selectmen's or the recreation department budget. Currently, the advisory board has determined the money be transferred into the selectmen's account.

Worley said the commission would like to have the money in the recreation department budget so that "theoretically two boards would not be administering the same program." He said there was a potential problem with the proposed bookkeeping procedure, although Worley said he foresees no practical problem with the method.

Selectmen said the money for the stickers will remain in their budget, to be used by the recreation director for the issuance of beach stickers.

The commission approached selectmen a couple months ago with the idea of transferring the stickers to that department.

According to Barrow, who is also a Cohasset police sergeant, the police station was too busy in the summer to handle the administration of the stickers.

The recreation department thought it would be "good public relations" to issue the stickers from that office.

Barrow said the commission remains opposed to the issuance of guest permits. If the current board of selectmen does not agree with the commission's recommendation, the only alternative is to ask the new board of selectmen in April to reconsider the previous board's vote, he added.

Cohasset reading clinic

The Cohasset Reading Clinic has invited Mary Chatillon, director of reading of Massachusetts General Hospital to speak Monday, April 11 at 7:30 p.m. at the Cushing Room, Rockland Trust Co., Cushing Plaza, Route 3A, Cohasset.

Chatillon will discuss specific language disabilities and the Orton-Gillingham approach to remediation. The Orton-Gillingham approach is a highly structured, multi-sensory program for teaching children and adults who have not been successful in learning to read, spell and write with conventional classroom methods despite possession of average or above average intelligence.

Following the meeting, the Cohasset Reading Clinic will discuss its annual six week summer program in reading, spelling and writing open to all students in area towns.

signed until March 15. Chief Kealey said he had accepted the original contract as presented, but it took town counsel time to review the finalized document, he said.

According to the contract, the town will arrange for Kealey to obtain a leave of absence from his position as patrolman, in accordance with all provisions of Civil Service regulations. This leave of absence will be effective until June 15, 1983.

In the event that Kealey's employment as chief is terminated prior to June 15, he shall be reinstated to his position as patrolman with the Cohasset Police Department.

Upon reinstatement, Kealey shall be entitled to the full benefits of Civil Service and the collective bargaining agreement, including all longevity and seniority benefits "as if Kealey has been serving continuously in such position."

This provision is in direct reference to the attempt at the scheduled April 2 town meeting to place the chief's position back into Civil Service.

Since voters decided in 1978 to eliminate the chief's position from Civil Service, the supervisory staff position has been under the jurisdiction of selectmen.

Police Sgt. Richard Barrow and 300 other petitioners, proposed three weeks ago that a referendum question be placed in the April 9 town election. That question asked voters to approve placing the police chief's job back under Civil Service.

Two weeks ago Town Counsel Richard Henderson advised selectmen that the proposal was illegal. Instead, voters would have to request selectmen petition for repeal of the special legislation which allowed the chief's position to be taken from Civil Service.

That extra step would have to be voted at an annual town meeting before any change is made in the administration of the police chief position, Henderson said.

Selectmen agreed to place that question in the April 2 town meeting warrant.

When reached at his Marshfield home, Chief Kealey said he would not comment on his new multi-year contract "until after things are settled after town meeting."

Chief Kealey will receive $29,000 the first year of the contract; $30,740 the second year; and $32,584 the third year.

According to the contract, the board of selectmen could dismiss the chief "for good cause including, but not limited to, inefficiency, conduct unbecoming a chief, and insubordination." The chief would be given a hearing on any charges for dismissal brought against him.

The chief would also have the right to appeal selectmen's decision to the personnel committee.

The contract also includes various clauses concerning permanent and temporary physical incapacity. According to the provisions of the Massachusetts General Laws, including Chapter 41, the board may terminate Kealey's employment if the board of physicians finds he lacks the physical capacity to perform the duties of chief.

If a board of physicians find that Kealey temporarily lacks the physical capacity to perform his duties, he may be dismissed for a period of 120 days. If he fails to resume the duties of chief after that time, the board may terminate Kealey's contract.

If a majority of the board of physicians find that Kealey lacks the physical capacity to perform his duties by reason of personal injury sustained in the performance of duty, Kealey may not be dismissed for one year. If Kealey fails to resume the duties of chief at the expiration of one year, the board of selectmen may terminate the chief's contract.

Similar disability benefit clauses were included in selectmen's contract with Fire Chief Martin Dooley.

Clay class cancellation

The South Shore Art Center's children's clay class, scheduled to begin Monday, March 28, has been postponed one week and will begin Monday, April 4. The class will meet at the Center, 103 Ripley Road, from 3:30 to 5 p.m. and is open to children between six and 12 years-old.

School budget debate at a standstill...

In addition, the school board is asking the advisory committee to back a town meeting article which would provide reimbursement to the school department for tuition for state ward children. This could amount to $5,000.

The advisory committee will consider the article and if passed, the school budget is then $48,000 short of the advisory board's goal.

In her opening remarks at the joint meeting, Advisory Committee Chairman Jean Cotton said the advisory board allowed the school dept. about $97,929 more than last year. She said all town departments were given a figure and all adhered to the goal. Essentially, she said, the school dept.'s budget should be treated the same.

The school dept. first studied a budget proposal of $4,074,473, but cut back $200,241 in line budget items.

It is now unlikely the advisory committee will recommend any transfer from the town's reserve fund which stands at $100,000 or the free cash account of $477,000.

The reserve account is used for capital or maintenace emergencies. Town Accountant Bill Signorelli said if all of the town warrant articles involving money are passed, the free cash account will be reduced by $100,000 to $377,000.

Another matter of discussion is the proposal by the school committee to have some money reimbursed to the school dept. for paying a water bill, school grounds maintenance and nearly $20,000 in unemployment costs.

Conley said the school dept. is the only one which pays their costs.

The consensus of School Committee members is that these bills are charged to the committee and sent to the state, which reimburses the town's treasury, but the school dept. never sees the reimbursement.

The March 17 meeting, attended by about 25 residents, featured some emotion by the school committee members who feel further cuts would injure the quality of education of the school system.

School Committee Chairman Diana Kornet said, "We have been working on cutting the fat for six or seven years. We can't cut any more and still maintain the education that Cohasset wants."

She opposed any cuts to the gifted and talented program, closing the Osgood School or the elimination of the advanced placement classes.

Advisory committee member Steve Bartow suggested the school committee should rethink its budget plan differently and like business practices, "to maintain the quality of the product, you streamline the way you do things."

He added, "No business would put a budget together as you have."

Kornet replied that the school dept. has certain legal obligations and has budgeted next year's fiscal plan, school by school and grade by grade.

Cotton said the advisory committee's message was not to criticize and not to say the school budget is not efficient, but to suggest that the board look at different ways of financing.

Advisory board member Jackie Dormitzer told the school board it should continue to examine the budget and study the costs of magazines in the school library, a math aide for grades 7-12 and secretarial help at the high school.

The math aides and secretarial help were discussed at Monday's school committee meeting. Committee member Martha Gjesteby said these items could be trimmed. She also suggested the committee study her proposal to cut a fifth and sixth grade teacher and cut back from full to part-time positions in the industrial arts and home economics classes, and in the physical education classes at the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools.

She said with the advent of declining enrollment, the school dept. must reorganize its staffing.

Some of the industrial arts and home economics classes have small student-teacher ratios, Gjesteby said.

Board member Jack Langmaid said tenured teachers prevent the system from eliminating the full-time positions. Kornet added the small size of the classes is needed for safety and productivity reasons.

Conley said because several students pursue careers in these subjects, it was sufficient to continue the small class size.

Crowell said in order to keep a comprehensive curriculum, small class sizes must be tolerated.

"We are trying to use the concept of a half-time teacher when possible, but in many instances, you give up experience. Teachers are certified but may not have the experience," he said.

Regarding the secretarial help at the high school, Crowell said the school dept. will have a problem in covering vacation time if further secretarial help is cut back. He said further cuts may mean administrators may be manning the phones or typing reports. "In fact, that's happening now," he said.

Gjesteby also suggested using community resident assistance or students with exceptional math ability as math aides.

Kornet said the aides would not be viable at the high school with the same educational results. High school student council representatives told Gjesteby the aides can only help so much and some do not know the advanced subject matter.

The committee did agree to review combining a second or third grade, fifth or sixth grade classroom.

The committee will meet Monday, March 28 to discuss further budget items before the April 2 town meeting.

"You're welcome," Justin Hughes, 12, and Abbey — who head for Little Harbor on another soggy day.

☐Julie Hoogeveen was named a County Top Ten Senior at the 1982-83 Plymouth County Horse Judging Contest announced by 4-H Club Agent, Robert Mott. Winners had the top overall scores after four judging tours in which over 100 4-H members participated.

Julie also won the Horse Bowl Competition and will represent Plymouth County in the state competition April 16 at the Northampton Tri County Fairgrounds.

Contestants must first place high on a written test based on horse knowledge and then participate in several elimination rounds.

Congratulations, Julie, and good luck in April.

☐Bonnie McClay of Beechwood Street was named to the Dean's Honors list for the fall semester of the 1982-83 academic year at Suffolk University, Boston. McClay is a sophomore in the school of management. Students must earn a grade point average of 3.0 or higher to qualify for the Dean's List.

The attendance was super and the winners were Jane Goff in the women's division and Ernie Grassie in the men's.

☐Mike Casey, a student at Vermont Academy, is home for his semester break. Mike had a successful season in football and hockey and is now looking forward to the lacrosse season.

☐Sure was great to see Bob Pape driving one of his big machines through town the other day. Everyone's glad Bob is healthy again, we missed seeing that big smile all over town.

☐Jeff and Don Steele are grandparents again, this time Nina presented them with an adorable grandson. Jeff has sure been a busy lady, between taking excellent care of her mom and taking charge of Nina's home...everyone is happy and healthy now, so all of her efforts have paid off.

☐The tribute paid to John and Mary Fleming was one they won't forget soon. Ellen Morrissey did it again (with a lot of help from her friends). It's always a sign of success when partygoers stay beyond the limit, which they did. Best of luck to the Flemings.

☐Ken Fone is determined to get over his current bout with pneumonia in time to go to Bermuda with his family and I'm sure he'll do it...he's never missed a hoop yet.

☐A lot of people tried Joan Pinkham's Irish Mist Coffee in honor of St. Patrick's day and they all loved it. As one gal said, "We certainly aren't going to limit that recipe to one day a year, it's yummy."

☐Heard from Walter Sweeney a couple of days ago. He is going to be working his way across the country, lecturing on the subject of alcohol and drugs, and hopes to wind up here. His is a success story that's made many people happy; he's got many friends and relatives in the area.

☐If most of the sophomores at the high school look a bit weary, it's due to the big term paper due the first of next month...Take heart, kids, every class before you had to do the same thing and they did survive, honest.

☐Jason Marsac ran the route (the Cohasset Road Race route) again recently. He may come out way at the top in the boy's division.

☐Jamie Hoffman looks like his old self again after a bout with appendicitis that finally had to be operated on. He says he feels much better.

☐It will seem funny to listen to the weather and not see Don Kent at the helm. The "Grandfather" of weather will be missed.

☐Rocky Laugelle is walking around with another feather in his cap...seems he cooked a great Irish dinner. He's always been known for his excellent spaghetti feeds. James Beard had better watch out.

☐Don't forget the Booster's Club Scholarship Dance Friday, March 26 at the Sons of Italy Hall in Hingham. The committee is working hard to make it an event to remember.

Special Counsel Bracken responds to state study denial

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Special Counsel Thomas Bracken has replied to the Feb. 18 letter from Assistant Attorney Genral Anne Rogers, in which she refused to fund a $90,000 supplemental study for the sewage disposal problems of the town.

Bracken submitted a nine-page letter and additional data from Ward Engineering to support his contentions. Rogers has 10 days in which to reply, according to Sewer Commissioner Charles DeSantis.

Ward wrote the availability of more than one alternative to the current proposal (the Metcalf and Eddy Plan) will be "far less expensive overall and far more affordable to the town, while providing an equivalent level of water quality and public health protection."

Ward suggested the additoinal study would be justified because it would "in all probability result in a far lower cost solution to the permit violations, with significantly less delay" (than building a large new central plant).

He said "Economical reduction of hydraulic loads can be achieved through two primary means: control of infiltration and inflow, and storage and off-peak pumping from major users.

"Four major users account for 30 to 38 percent of the average daily flow. Peak flow rates from the high school alone are on the order of 75,000 gallons per day, or 25 percent of the peak flow. Off peak pumping from this source alone could be expected to have a significant benefit on the plant."

He suggested additoinal flow reduction could be achieved through residential water saving devices.

Ward also proposed the study results might be a significantly more cost-effective long-term program for sewage disposal for the currently unsewered areas of town.

Ward acknowledged that a large proportion of the soils are not "suitable" for conventoinal leaching systems.

However, the issue is not approval of undeveloped lots, but cost-effective correction of existing problems, Ward added.

The current plan did not consider interceptor or relief drainage for groundwater control, cross slope systems, or sizing leaching systems based on bio-crust. Ward said the apparent assumption of the Metcalf and Eddy plan was that every home would require either a mound system or holding tank, the most expensive of the alternatives.

At most, 30 percent might need a true pumped mound system, with only a relative handful requiring extreme measures such as holding tanks or underdrained sand filters with clorination and discharge.

Unlike the Metcalf and Eddy study, the proposed supplement will provide projections for the entire town, in accordance with EPA policy. This will enable the town to apply for grant assistance for correction of problems throughout the town, rather than just in a limited area of proposed sewer service.

Pre-December, 1977-built homes can be cost down to a small fraction of centralized sewer system costs.

Contrary to EPA requirements, the current study provides no evaluation of alternative collector sewer methods. With ledge conditions, conventional gravity systems can be "extremely costly," Ward said. He suggested use of pressure and effluent sewers especially in areas of larger lot frontage.

Gravity effluent sewers are less costly than conventional solids carrying sewers, and he submitted information from New York.

Ward claimed regional connection of all of Cohasset's sewer system to another community was not evaluated.

Six million dollars is the apparent capital cost savings advantage for regional connection. He acknowledged that the Hull plant suffers from severe infiltration and inflow problems, but suggested that Cohasset could pump there during off-peak hours.

"A capital cost saving of $6 million by eliminating a Cohasset treatment system, would go a long way in financing rehabilitation of Hull's sewer system (with federal and state funds)."

Claudette Fitzsimmons, chairman of the Hull Board of Selectmen, said March 12 that Hull had asked Cohasset two years ago if they would be willing to join in using the Hull plant. The Hull plant capacity is three million gallons per day but they are using less than one million.

Rogers' letter claimed that the proposed supplemental study would delay design and construction grants to the time when funding would be reduced to 55 percent. In reply, Ward said his proposal "calls for completion in less than seven months."

Rather than three work items being done sequentially, he feels "those items, in large part, can and should be done simultaneously."

The present treatment plant can be brought into compliance more quickly than by waiting for construction fo a major new facility, Ward added.

"It is highly probable that costs of any proposed alternative to the current plan will be less than $8 million and therefore eligible for a Step 2-3 grant. This would enable the EPA funding to be committed well in advance of October 1984, avoiding the partial loss of federal funding, Ward concluded.

Sewer Commissioner Charles DeSantis said "the effort expended to try to save spending $20 million extra on the three phase sewer system in Cohasset has been considerable, and perhaps more than if I were proposing to go from spending $6 to 8 million to $30 million!"

DeSantis added that "even taking into account the cost of connecting with Hull, the federal government could save over $4 million, which could be put into fixing the problems in Hull, so it would be cost effective for the government, and 'cost containment' is the present federal policy."

'Focus on the Family'

The fourth in the seven-part film series, "Focus on the Family," will be presented Sunday, March 27 at 6:30 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church. The public is welcome and it is not necessary to have attended the earlier films.

This Sunday's film is titled "Preparing for Adolescence: The Origins of Self-doubt." Dr. James Dobson, featured leader of the series, will discuss the feeling of inferiority as young people approach adolescence and he suggests the secret of self-esteem.

The earlier films have attracted audiences of as many as 110. The films run for about an hour. Afterwards refreshments will be served, followed by small informal discussion groups for those who wish to stay. The whole program is limited to two hours.

Editorial

Hand-in-hand

The quarrel between the school committee and the advisory board over the 1983-84 school budget has narrowed to $48,000, or about 1¼ percent of the $3,790,161 recommended by the advisory board. We believe the school committee could and should come down to the advisory board figure.

We side with the advisory board first because the figure is relatively small — another $48,000 ought to be subtractable without layoffs or harm to education. But the fundamental reason we side with the advisory board is that the cuts it recommended in town departments were equal in percentage across the board.

Without compelling reasons for an exception being made, we believe the school department should be held to the same parameter as other departments. Education is both worthy and vital — but so is public safety; so is public sanitation.

The problem may well be resolved happily later in the year when cherry sheet disbursements are announced. If the governor and the legislature do their duty (by which, by the way, we do not mean raising taxes) moneys may be available for a number of items curtailed under budget cuts.

Failing good news on cherry sheet day, the school department is free to go to a special town meeting should it believe Cohasset's children truly must have that $48,000. If the committee makes a persuasive case, we'll back them. But as it is, no persuasive case has been made that the school department should operate according to a different formula than its fellow departments.

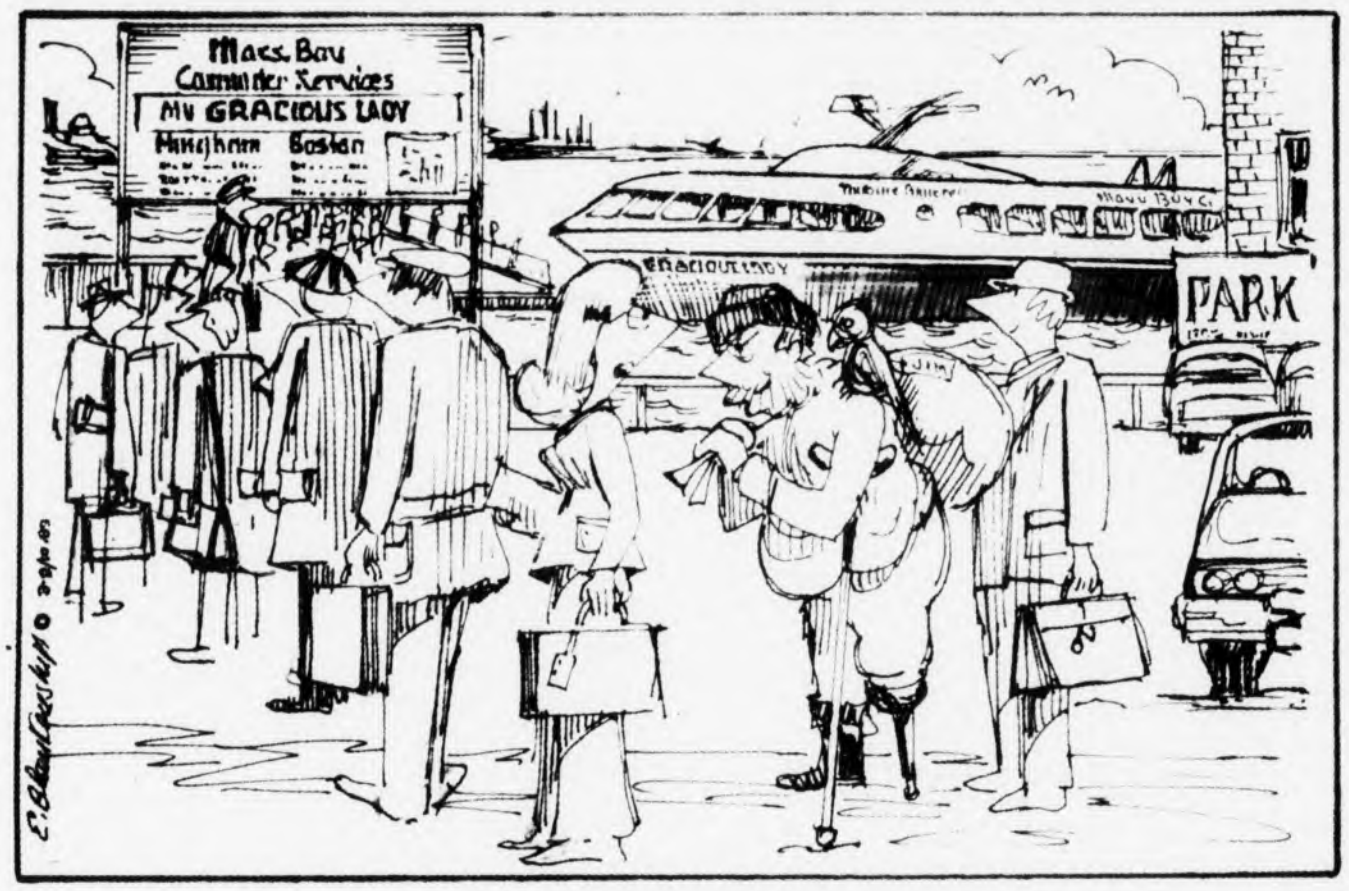
So much for the 48 grand. A larger principle is involved here, one that merits a few lines of commentary. The school committee must recall that Prop. 2½ did not merely put a cap on local taxation and therefore local spending. It also put an end to "fiscal autonomy."

Under fiscal autonomy, school committees statewide had the power to set their own spending goals, and taxpayers and town meetings had no choice but to go along. It was a public policy designed (rightly or wrongly) to protect education from the vagaries of town meetings, boards or aldermen, and city councils.

Rightly or wrongly fiscal autonomy was abolished in 1980. This means that school committees must scramble for the municipal dollar along with police departments and sanitation departments. Practically speaking, it means that school committees must work hand-in-hand with advisory boards...and that is our drift.

To our way of thinking it makes little sense for the school committee and the advisory board to confront each other as adversaries once a year. They need to work together throughout the year and be privy to each other's problems.

If the advisory board finds it necessary to recommend across-the-board cuts in departmental budgets, the school committee should not only know it, it should know exactly why. If the school committee is finding that budgetary constraints are hurting the education of the children of Cohasset, the advisory board should know that...and exactly why. In short, there needs to be cooperation, not merely confrontation, between the two boards.



Having said that, and having come down on the side of the advisory board on the issue of the $48,000, we must add that under terribly difficult circumstances, Superintendent Crowell and the school committee have conjured up a school budget that is fair, rational, and very tight. It is not with joy, it is with regret, that we consider it a duty to recommend lopping off yet another $48,000 after the considerable cuts that have already been made.

We would hope that both our school superintendent and our school committee members will see the day rather soon, when instead of fighting for scraps, they are implementing the literal and figurative enrichment of the system they serve.

Vandalism fund refunded

The school committee plans to return $100 each to the PSO and the Athletic Boosters Club and also help pay for any cost overruns in the high school senior class play production. Junior and senior high students, the PSO and the Boosters Club contributed to a vandalism fund in the late fall to help the school committee pay for the destruction caused by a severe vandalism spree which damaged Cohasset's three schools. The students and organizations raised $900. Since the vandals were apprehended, were found guilty and required to pay restitution, the vandalism fund will be used for student projects.

Now there's something to cry about

By Claire McDonough

Skipper opened a kitchen cabinet and weighed the relative merits of a fluffernutter and a grilled cheese sandwich.

"How come Ma's crying?" he asked.

Breida considered. "That depends. Is the t.v. on?"

Skipper listened for a minute. "Yeah. I can hear the theme from 'Lassie.' They must be showing a re-run."

"Oh well," Breida shrugged. "That explains it. She always cries when Lassie jumps over the fence at the end. One day I saw her watch a Mickey Mouse cartoon and cry at the happy ending."

Larry looked up. "Crying over Mickey Mouse is understandable. Kind of. But how about the time she saw the three little pigs escape from the big, bad wolf? She was undone for the day."

"That's nothing," Patrick interjected. "I saw her get all misty-eyed because some lady in a commercial got rid of yellow wax build-up."

I walked into the room wiping my eyes.

"You people have no sensitivity at all," I sniffed. "No man is an island. We all share in the tragedies of our brothers and sisters. As long as one woman in the world can't cope with ring around the collar, we are all diminished. If there is one soul out there who doesn't realize there's an eight-hour perfume that can turn her into a 24-hour woman, the bell doesn't just toll for her. It tolls for me."

Breida rolled her eyes heavenward.

"Motherrrr," she sighed, "we all appreciate your compassionate nature. But you're the only one we know who cries at supermarket openings. It's very embarassing if our friends see you."

"It's not just supermarket openings," I countered. "The world is full of things to cry over. Do you realize that J.R. is trying to send all that oil through Cuba so he can avoid the taxes? Just think what that'll do to poor Miss Ellie.

"And Quincy and that nice Captain on 'Hill Street Blues' both got married. Latest statistics show that one out of every two marriages fails. I'm just worried sick about which of them will wind up in the divorce courts.

"You think I don't have plenty to cry about? Gary Trudeau's on a sabbatical from 'Doonesbury' and I have no idea how Joanie and her husband are bringing up their baby.

"President Reagan came to Boston, and he never set foot in Scituate. The franc has devalued again. My bank book won't balance. Fighting is flaring up in Lebanon. Princess Di is losing weight. The EPA is losing credibility. And I just can't believe what happened to Marie Antoinette."

Skipper put his arm around my shoulders.

"It's o.k., Ma," he said sympathetically. "I understand, even if the other kids don't. You have some pretty serious things to worry about. I don't want to place any other burdens on you, so don't bother reading this."

He put an envelope in front of me. "Just sign it."

"What is it?" I asked.

"His report card," Breida grinned. "Read it and weep."

Letters

Dormitzer misquoted

To the Editor:

I am responding to Robert Stanton's letter to the editor, March 16, in which he attacked me personally for words I never said.

The statement that I would "feel better about a ramp for the disabled if more people would use it" was made by someone else, not by me. It was incorrectly reported in the Patriot Ledger.

Let's set the record straight and clear my name.

Another comment on the sewer issue

Letters

To the Editor:

What is the sewer story? This letter is to inform the public about the sewer study, Article 4 and other questions you may have — it is intended to help you answer some questions.

Article 4 asks for a study of areas, Veterans Project, Hillside, Great Brewster, Schools, Music Circus, etc. Thirteen engineering firms looked at these areas before one firm was chosen.

The study will cost the Town $100,000 for completion and most likely another $100,000 in lawyer fees.

What will they look for? They will ask permission or look for legal permission to go on all private property. They will inspect your septic and leaching field. They will bore down into the earth to take soil samples. If your system can be repaired, the cost, etc. will be determined.

Ninety percent of all engineering firms said we can't fix them all, our engaged engineering firm — Ward Engineering says "I think I can fix 50 percent of them."

This is a problem not because we know you have a problem but your neighbor sure does. How shall we fix the 50 percent? Various kinds of methods will be used, new tanks, new soils, above ground systems. Who pays? The engineer says the state and federal government will pay — yet not one town or city in Mass. has collected any funds. We will have an exact record of every home and its sewage system so we can have 100 percent numbers of failures or future failures.

Now for the 50 percent we can't repair we have a few methods for that:

1. We will put a grinder pump in your basement or septic tank. You will pump into the sewer system.

2. We will leave your septic tank in and just take the liquid out of the tank.

Both ways you have the expense of electricity, pump repairs or pumping out septic tanks. Now we have some house repairs, some hooked into a system to go somewhere.

The school ballfield being one suggestion, Cohasset Common? Cohasset parks, any empty lots of land they will perk may take several houses into one system.

Is this what you want? Remember if you can get the problem fixed and payed for by the state, etc. will it fail in the future — if so you would be responsible for the repair. Mr. Ward states 20 percent of those fixed will fail.

Present plant fix up. Yes, this question has been addressed by one firm, we can up-date to meet our discharge permit — of a flow of 150,000 gallons? But the 50 percent of town we can't fix comes to 150,000 gallons therefore, you would have to build a new plant.

Did anyone of you see the marsh last week in the storm? So we still need a new sewer plant and a septic tank treatment center. This septic tank treatment center would be at the Jones site so, therefore, shall we build the new plant there also? or have two plants?

The cost of the plant phase two is $16 million dollars. Phase three is going to be studied — to do on site repairs and pump out etc. — because of the larger land areas. Phase three will not be hooked to sewer — the smaller area and low flows may be pumped to Hull.

Metcalf and Eddy studied pumping the sewage to Hull, because of small pump stations, small lines, overflow systems — these two areas were studied under the M & E report.

The next study for the step two will study in more detail certain parts of the plan. Another engineering firm will check out the M & E plan and under E.P.A. guidelines (called Value Engineering). Also, the E.P.A. and state check to see if the town can afford the plant.

The cost will be $68 per hundred thousand of evaluation. What will you get in return? The pollution problems of Cohasset's critical areas will be taken care of. We will have a place to treat septic waste. Under the present system the septic waste of Cohasset goes to the MDC. They are now in the process of charging towns for use of the MDC. This will be another charge to the town.

We have all worked hard — we have all had open minds — there is no other cost effective solution to the problem.

For those who do not remember — the Town voters picked the location of the Jones site after turning down other sites.

We are in luck that the Hillside slants toward the present sewer plant and will flow by gravity to the plant. The Veteran's Project will flow by gravity to the pump station — same for other sections.

By using the gravity lines we don't need pump stations or grinder pumps in every home. As to small pressure sewer lines — all lines must be below five feet to avoid freezing. Then all sewer lines must be below water lines so this brings us to seven feet deep. The cost of the additional depth is minimal when placed against every home having to have a pump.

We hope you understand the plan better.

Mariner survey

This spring's annual town meeting will be an important one for determining Cohasset's future.

The annual town meting and election will be held Saturday, April 2 and Saturday, April 9. The Mariner invites residents to air their views on potential town meeting articles, ballot questions and general opinions of local government.

This survey will be in the next three issues of the Mariner with the results published March 30.

1. Should the town rescind its November special town meeting vote and revert to the Metcalf and Eddy sewer plan?
—— Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

2. Should the town continue with the Charles DeSantis sponsored article and seek other alternatives to the town's sewer problems?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

3. Should the position of police chief be returned to Civil Service?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

4. Should the position of police chief continue to be solely under the jurisdiction of selectmen?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

5. Should a special citizen's task force be re-established to screen police chief candidates?
——Yes——No ——No Opinion.

6. Should the town allow the police chief to be a "strong chief," free from interference from the selectmen and not under Civil Service?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

7. Should the school committee be allowed to exceed the advisory board's spending guidelines?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

8. Should the town landfill be run by a private contractor?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

9. Should police officers be hired to patrol Cohasset Village on a 24-hour basis?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

10. Should the planning board establish an adult entertainment zone before a business firm applies?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

11. Should the town go forward with the harbor expansion project?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

12. If the town does expand the harbor, should recreational boaters be allowed to use the new pier?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

13. Should the school department be charged for water and sewer costs with the costs included in the school budget?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

14. Should the town prohibit a special town meeting from voting changes in the structure of town government?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

15. Should guests of residents be charged a beach and landfill sticker?
——Yes ——No ——No Opinion.

State handicapped law refers to town ramp

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Should the voters of Cohasset approve a ramp to the side door of the Town Hall so that the handicapped may have access to the plays, voting, selectmen's meetings, board of appeals hearings, recreation department and other activities?

Robert Stanton, 31, of Clay Spring Road thinks so. So does Helen Barrow, 63, of Smith Place.

Stanton has brought the plight of the disabled to the forefront in letters to the selectmen and the media. Barrow has appealed to the Democratic Town Committee for support.

Stanton is confined to a wheelchair as a result of a diving accident. Barrow, who spent months in rehabilitation following a stroke, and who suffers from cataracts, uses a cane. She finds town hall stairs difficult.

Stanton hopes to address an article in the warrant at the April Town meeting authorizing the maximum expenditure of $5,000. He says that he can get into the high school auditorium, where Town meeting is held through a side, ramped door.

Some members of the advisory board and a member of the Democratic Town Committee feel "these people can be served in some other way than such a large expenditure."

Town hall has three granite steps plus a wooden riser at the front door. Inside, there are 21 steps up to the selectmen's office, and nine additional steps to the other town offices which are located over the first floor hall.

The town offices were on the first floor and the hall on the second floor, until the building was "renovated" about 1928, and the locations reversed.

Stanton emphasizes that he is not asking for huge expenditures to ramp the second floor of the town hall, or to install an elevator. He will be satisfied to get in to vote, see a play, etc. on the first floor. When he attended a democratic caucus he had to arrange for a friend, Fred Koed, to lift him inside. He likes to be independent, and wants to get himself into the town hall, without preplanning for assistance, and to participate in an integrated setting.

Both Barrow and Stanton stress that they are speaking for more than the four residents they know who are confined to wheelchairs. They know of many other residents who have to use walkers and canes.

Stanton has his own wing and bathroom in his parents' house, and "comes and goes as he pleases" using a lift off the deck of his room, and a specially equipped van. He works at the J.F.K. Building in Boston, which is handicapped accessible.

What are their rights under the laws?

Peter Myette, federal law 504 coordinator for the State Office of Handicapped Affairs told the Mariner that under the rules and regulations of revenue sharing regarding fiscal assistance to state and local governments, discrimination on the basis of handicap, as of Jan. 5, 1981, for a town which receives more than $25,000 in federal revenue sharing, are stricter than for towns which receive less.

Cohasset received over $88,000 last year.

The law states: "No qualified handicapped individual shall, because the facilities owned or leased by a recipient government are inaccessible to or unusable by handicapped persons, be denied the benefits of, be excluded from participation in, or otherwise be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity of a recipient government, which government receives entitlement funds.

"A recipient government shall operate each program or activity in existing facilities owned or leased by it, so that the program or activity when viewed in its entirety, is readily accessible to and useable by handicapped individuals. Recipient governments are not necessarily required to make each existing facility or every part of an existing facility accessible to and useable by handicapped individuals.

"Where structural changes are necessary to make programs or activities in existing facilities accessible, such changes shall be made as soon as practicable, but in no event later than three years after the effective date of this regulation except as otherwise provided in this section...a recipient government shall give priority to those methods that offer programs and acitivities to handicapped persons in the most integrated setting appropriate to obtain the full benefits of the program."

Myette also explained a law which specifically address theatres, and auditoriums, meeting places or halls, and the rights of the disabled.

He also said Stanton could sue under the 114th Amendment to the State Constitution enacted Dec. 4, 1980.

Myette said the American National Standard Handbook of specifications for making buildings and facilities accessible to and useable by physically handicapped people, has four pages of ramp specifications and designs.

Myette said, "I've seen a town in New Hampshire, which was really fiscally conservative, but they voted unanimously to spend the money."

How will Cohasset vote?

Major town meeting articles explained . . . Part I

The Mariner will be publishing the major town meeting warrant articles in the next two issues. Here is a list of the articles through Article 25.

ARTICLE 7

(Inserted by the board of selectmen, Henry Ainslie, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will raise and appropriate, or transfer from available funds, the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of a Reserve Fund; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory committee recommends — Maintains the Fund at 1982 and 1983 levels which has proven to be necessary.

ARTICLE 10

(Inserted by the board of selectmen, Henry Ainslie, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will raise and appropriate the sum of $2,191 for the purpose of maintaining during the ensuing fiscal year the mosquito control works and improvements of low lands and swamps as estimated and certified by the State Reclamation Board in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 112 of the Acts of 1931; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — This is state mandated.

(Inserted by the school committee, Diana Kornet, chairwoman, and others.)

To see if the Town will raise and appropriate, or transfer from available funds, the sum of $20,000 for the repair or replacement of the roof on the kitchen section of the Deer Hill School; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — School facilities examined the roof and explained the need as a result of possible faulty construction.

(Inserted by the water commissioners, Robert Jackson, chairman and others.)

To see if the Town will raise and appropriate or borrow a sum of money to rehabilitate the water distribution system along Margin Street and Atlantic Avenue from Elm Street to Nichols Road, such project to be done in conjunction with funds allotted or to be allotted by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts pursuant to Chapter 805 of the Acts of 1979, as amended, and to see if the Town will appropriate from water revenue a sum of money to pay for interest incurred with regard to authorized loans; or act on anything relating thereto.

(Inserted by the water commissioners, Robert Jackson, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to appropriate funds received or to be received pursuant to Chapter 805 of the Acts of 1979, as amended, to be used for partial payment of an engineering contract relating to the detection of leaks in the Town's water system; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — From the floor of Town Meeting.

(Inserted by the board of selectmen at the request of Harold Litchfield, highway surveyor.)

To see if the Town will raise and appropriate the sum of $50,000 for resurfacing, with bituminous concrete, certain streets in the Town, including any other work relating thereto, and to meet the appropriation the treasurer, with the approval of the board of selectmen, be authorized to borrow $23,472 in accordance with Massachusetts General Laws, Chapter 44, Section 6A, which sum represents state funds allotted in accordance with Chapter 191 of the Acts of 1982; to see if the Town will authorize the transfer of $5,273 received in accordance with Chapter 335 of the Acts of 1982, and the balance of $21,255 to be raised by taxation; or act on anythiung relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — Continues program of road resurfacing. The state pays $28,745 and the town, $21,255.

(Inserted by the board of selectmen at the request of Harold Litchfield, highway surveyor.)

To see if the Town will raise and appropriate or transfer from available funds the sum of $38,000 to purchase a new truck with a dump body and a mounted unit for cleaning catch basins and authorize the "trade in" of the 1969 Ford F800 with catch basin cleaner and dump body; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory committee recommends — To replace a 1969 Ford with a new truck and a unit for cleaning catch basins. There are 1,100 catch basins cleaned twice a year. Also used for plowing.

ARTICLE 17

(Inserted by the board of selectmen at the request of Peter Laugelle, tree and park superintendent.)

To see if the Town will vote to raise and appropriate or transfer from available funds, the sum of $24,000 to purchase a stake body truck for the tree and park department, and authorize the "trade in" of a 1968 stake body truck F500; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — To replace a 1968 stake body truck. Having been repaired many times, its time has come.

(Inserted by the board of selectmen at the request of Peter Laugelle, tree and park superintendent.)

To see if the Town will vote to appropriate from the "Sale of Cemetery Lots Fund — Woodside" the sum of $2,500 to replace the underground watering system and to extend the system where necessary; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — Old system is breaking down. Financed by sale of lots in cemetery.

ARTICLE 19

(Inserted by the board of selectmen, Henry Ainslie, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will raise and appropriate the sum of $2,100 to be used for its proportionate cost of the control of insect, vegetable and animal life in Straits Pond for the ensuing fiscal year, as advised by the State Reclamation Board as provided by Chapter 557 of the Acts of 1955, as amended; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — A joint project with Hull. Our cost has been declining.

(Inserted by the school committee, Diana Kornet, chairwoman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to accept the establishment of a School Department Fund under the provisions of Massachusetts General Laws, Chapter 71, Section 71F, permitting the school committee to extend, without further appropriation, funds received for the education of non-resident students and for such students who are foster care children; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee to recommend from the floor of Town Meeting.

(Inserted by the board of selectmen at the request of the harbor committee, Charles Fink, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to amend Article IX of the General By-Laws by striking therefrom Subsection (a) of Section 2 and substituting in its place and stead the following Subsections (a) (i), (a) (ii) and (a) (iii):

(a) (i) No person shall moor any boat within the limits of Cohasset Harbor without first obtaining a permit from the harbormaster. A permit must be obtained for each calendar year at a fee set annually by the board of selectmen. The application for such permit shall be made to the harbormaster on a form prescribed by the board of selectmen. The application shall state the name and address of the owner, the size and type of boat to be moored, the size and type of mooring, and, if the mooring is already in the water, the location thereof, with sufficient details to enable the harbormaster to locate it.

(ii) On and after July 1, 1983, all boats moored in Cohasset Harbor will be required to display an annual decal on the port quarter aft of the boat to indicate that the mooring fee has been paid for the year and the boat is authorized to be on the mooring.

(iii) On and after July 1, 1983, mooring fees shall be paid by June 1 of each calendar year or the harbormaster shall remove the mooring tackle from the confines of Cohasset Harbor of each individual for whom or entity for which no mooring fee has been paid and such removal shall be at the owner's expense; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — Necessary for

ARTICLE 24

(Inserted by the board of selectmen at the request of the harbor committee, Charles Fink, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to amend Article IX of the General By-Laws by striking therefrom Subsection (f) of Section 2 and substituting in its place and stead the following Subparagraphs (f) (i) and (f) (ii):

"(f) (i) No boat shall be made fast to a Town landing or pier for more than 30 minutes except by permission of the harbormaster, which permission shall be granted only in case of emergency. Any individual or entity violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be liable for a fine of $10 for a first offense, $25 for a second offense and $50 for a third and each subsequent offense.

(ii) Boats anchored or moored in such a manner as to constitute a hazard to navigation or property may be moved at the owner's expense. As far as practical, the harbormaster shall require all commercial boats to be moored in a common area;" or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee to recommend from the floor of Town Meeting.

(Inserted by the board of selectmen, Henry Ainslie, chairman, citizens petition.)

To see if the Town will vote to authorize the board of selectmen to sell, after securing bids, the North Cohasset Fire Station building and land on which it is situated retaining a 25 foot easement to Straits Pond; the board of selectmen shall have the authority to impose upon the terms of the sale and on the said property such restrictions, reservations or conditions as they deem appropriate. They may execute, acknowledge and deliver, in the name and under the seal of the Town, deeds or other instruments therefor and to see what sum of money the Town will raise and appropriate to implement the foregoing; or act on anything relating thereto.

Not recommended by Advisory Committee — Old station is now being used for storage of equipment for tree and park and highway departments. This saves outside rental costs.

Clarification

Regarding the harbor wharf plan article published in the Mariner March 9, one fisherman was quoted as saying, "I've already seen Cohasset Fisherman Charlie Butman's 72-foot boat in the harbor three times. Even though it's shallow, he made room by turning his props." The Mariner also reported Butman usually docks in Scituate.

Lois Butman, Charlie's wife, told the Mariner recently, "My husband's 72-foot boat has never been in Cohasset Harbor. However, he did bring the 55-foot boat he previously owned into the harbor several times."

Absentee voting

Absentee voting will be taken by the town clerk's office until noon, Friday, April 8. The town election is Saturday, April 9.

School candidates night Thursday

The Parent School Organization (PSO) Activities Chairman Sue McNamara announces the PSO-sponsored School Committee Candidates' Night takes place Thursday, March 24 in Room 107 at the High School.

Refreshments wil be served at 7:30 p.m.; the program begins at 8.

"Our plan is to foster awareness of school-related issues," said McNamara. "We do not support issues or candidates. It is exciting to have three candidates for the two available seats. The public has a definite choice to make. We hope to help them make an informed decision."

School Committee Chairman Diana Kornet and committee member John Langmaid are the incumbents. Judith Volungis is the challenger. Candidates will respond to prepared questions. Additional questions will be entertained from the floor. Candidates will be given three minutes for their response. McNamara will moderate the discussion.

"We are pleased to offer this service to the community," said PSO President Nancy Sandell. "The League of Women Voters holds its Town Affairs Night March 29 and will present candidates for all public offices. The PSO forum provides still another opportunity for the townspeople to focus on school issues and answers."

Town Election Day is Saturday, April 9. Polls are open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Teacher evaluations

Administrators are expected to submit teacher evaluations to School Supt. Eugene Crowell by Friday, March 25. Personnel records and evaluations will be read by Crowell.

Ted Guild

At a coffee March 17 at the home of Gary and Ann Vanderweil, Ted Guild, candidate for the one-year term on the sewer commission, explained to a group of 20 people the impact of the central sewer plant proposal on the town finances. Guild favors a thorough investigation and study of the alternative systems before the town makes any financial commitment to the large central plant and big pipe sewering.

Guild said that Cohasset's share of the cost of the first stage of the proposed large system would be at least $4,600,000 and annual carrying costs on the bond would be $400,000 or more. This compares with present total tax revenues of roughly $5,500,000. Because of Prop.2½, the money for servicing the bond issue would have to come from funds for the school system and other essential town services. For this reason, it is essential to determine if less costly systems can be employed in Cohasset, Guild said.

Other coffees for Guild are scheduled as follows: March 21 — Ed and Priscilla Long, 31 Nichols Road, 383-1426, 7:30 p.m.; March 23 — Jim and Grace Donohue, 221 Forest Avenue, 383-9288, 7:30 p.m.; March 27 — Fred and Nancy Garrison, 429 King Street, 383-0571, 4 p.m.; March 28 — Austin and Nancy O'Toole, 13 Haystack Lane, 383-1547, 7:30 p.m.; March 30 — John and Jill O'Donnell, 72 Old Pasture Rd., 383-0199, 8 p.m.; April 5 — George and Patsy Rabstejnek, 181 Border Street, 383-1762, 8 p.m.; April 6 — John and Robin Suhrbier, Tom and Claffey Williams, 178 South Main Street, 383-0349, 8 p.m.; and April 7 — Tom and Sue Killilea, 110 Atlantic Avenue, 383-6589.

Anyone interested in discussing the sewer issue with Ted Guild should phone one of the above hosts.

John Langmaid

John F. Langmaid, III of 90 Beechwood St., is a candidate for re-election to the school committee in the April 9 town election. Langmaid, 48, is a graduate of Williams College and holds a master's degree in geology from Yale University. He worked as a securities analyst for a New York Stock Exchange brokerage firm until he was permanently disabled in 1973. He and his wife Chartis have two children attending Cohasset schools, Bill in the 10th grade, and Jamie in the seventh grade.

Langmaid has served two terms on the school committee. He has been secretary, vice chairman and chairman. The current excellence of the school system is a source of pride, but not an excuse for complacency. He feels that a positive attitude, confidence in the integrity and judgement of staff and an interest in finding new ways to improve the program will all be necessary to maintain and enhance the current fine system.

Langmaid has been very pleased and gratified by the support he has received from townspeople over the past six years for his efforts on behalf of the students and residents. Such encouragement and good will are refreshing and sustaining, particularly during difficult times when the school committee has been faced with limited means to educate the next generation for a complex and challenging future.

Robert Sturdy

Robert H. Sturdy is a candidate for a five-year term on the planning board. Sturdy is interested in assuring that the Town of Cohasset retains its qualities of openness and natural beauty as it develops. He believes that membership on the planning board offers a significant opportunity to achieve these goals.

Sturdy attended Massachusetts Institute of Technology, class of 1953. He then pursued a career in the field of engineering as a business executive. In business, his responsibilities included the selection of new sites for a number of plants, and their development and construction.

Sturdy and his wife, Joyce, have lived in Cohasset with their six children for the past 10 years. Prior to moving to Cohasset, Sturdy served on the Brookline School Committee at a time when the committee was building new schools and renovating old ones.

Since he is retired, Sturdy has the time to devote to the responsibilities required of a member of the planning board. He has studied the Zoning Bylaw of the Town of Cohasset and would recommend that it be reviewed in light of the town's current needs.

Judy Volungis

Judy Volungis, who is seeking a seat on the Cohasset School Committee, has announced some additions to her Election Committee. Working with Pat Buckley, Chairman, Rita Strong, Steering Committee, Don Larson, Treasurer, Fred Johansen, Fund Raising, Lee Jenkins and Mary Larson, Publicity, are Judy Fitzsimmons and Claudia Story, Coordinators of Coffees.

Judy's experience includes: nine years in education actively teaching and training teachers after receiving her M.Ed. in elementary education from Worcester State College; six years in private industry working with her husband as treasurer and financial manager in their own business; several years of volunteer hours in the school system on various levels; treasurer of the Community Garden Club and former board member of the Community Center.

She feels that she has the time, experience and background to make a valuable contribution to the school committee. Judy feels the school committee has the responsibility to maintain high academic standards, achieve financial stability and determine job trends by making a continued reassessment of the job market to better guide the students toward fulfilling careers.

A coffee was given Tuesday, March 22, by Judy and Roy Fitzsimmons of 116 Doane Street and another coffee is planned for Friday, March 25 at 8 p.m., given by John and Joanne Lennon of 57 Surrey Drive. Anyone interested in getting to know the candidate is invited.

John DeBassio

The Committee to Elect John A. DeBassio to a one-year term on the Board of Selectmen reminds voters there are several more residential coffees planned for DeBassio before April 9 elections.

Residents interested in attending residential coffees should call Coffee Chairman Maria Plante at 383-9263. In addition to residential coffees, DeBassio will be a guest at the League of Women Voters' "Town Affairs Night" to be held Tuesday, March 29 at 7:30 p.m. at Town Hall.

Last Sunday's public coffee at Kimball's By-The-Sea drew an afternoon crowd of 35 residents. To date, DeBassio has spoken privately with, or has publicly addressed, over 350 residents about town government issues.

The Committee to Elect DeBassio (14 strong) has now collectively gained over 100 pounds since the campaign's inception. That's five pounds per person, with Tony "The Jet" Fasciano having gained 20 pounds, thanks to Ginny DeBassio's fantastic meeting night treats.

Town Affairs Night

A discussion of the sewer articles will highlight the League of Women Voters annual Town Affairs Night, March 29, 7:30 p.m. at Town Hall.

Sewer commissioners and candidates have been invited to describe what they believe will be the impact of the sewer articles on Cohasset.

League Co-President Marie Caristi said, "The League is excited to be able to provide a forum where candidates and citizens can discuss the sewer issue in a non-partisan manner. By devoting a significant portion of the evening to this discussion, we hope that citizens will be better informed when they attend Town Meeting."

The rest of the evening has been allocated for statements by each candidate for town office. All candidates will be given three minutes to state their positions. At the conclusion of all presentations, the audience may ask questions. Moderator for the meeting will be Janine Broadhurst, voter service chairman.

Refreshments will be provided, and there will be a coffee break.

The League welcomes new members at any time. Membership information and applications will be provided at Town Affairs Night.

New cable committee

The school committee gave permission to School Supt. Eugene Crowell to set up a school cable advisory committee consisting of members from the PSO and sports committees.

Revised police regulations studied by officials

By Jane Lane

Selectmen are reviewing a revised set of police rules and regulations written by former police chief John DeBassio.

Selectman Henry Ainslie, who has gone over the proposed rules paragraph by paragraph, said he hoped to have the revised handbook finalized before he leaves office in about three weeks.

A delay in approving the rules and regulations was caused by the resignation of former Chief DeBassio and the prolonged time it took to select a successor.

Former police chief DeBassio had proposed the revised handbook last August before he left the department.

Before selectmen approve the handbook, Executive Secretary Mark Lanza and Police Chief Joseph Kealey will review it.

Cohasset Police Association President Paul Laugelle said the union has not been asked to review the revised handbook, although the membership would like that opportunity. Although it is not a stipulation in the union's contract, Laugelle said the association would like some input into the review.

Laugelle said selectmen have not requested any union representation in their review of the handbook. He said the association would like some initial involvement so that possible future contract grievances could be avoided.

The police association membership has not seen a copy of the revised rules and regulations.

The main concerns voiced last week by Selectman Ainslie regarding the handbook, was the ommission of any policies referring to police stake outs and permanent intermittent police officers.

During a hearing last year, regarding DeBassio's charges against permanent intermittent officer Larry Ainslie, the former chief said he was in the process of creating regulations pertaining to police stake outs, selectman Ainslie said.

The selectman said that regulation was not included in the revised handbook, nor was any mention made of permanent intermittent police officers.

Ainslie said the former chief inferred during the hearing, the two topics were "a big deal," yet no references were made to the subjects, Ainslie added. He asked Lanza to seek Chief Joseph Kealey's advice regarding development of these policies.

Ainslie had several other areas which he requested Lanza to review in depth with the police chief. After town counsel approves the revised handbook, selectmen will vote on the rules and regulations governing the local police department.

Police arrest two youths in vandalism case

Police have arrested two 15 year-old Cohasset boys and charged them with breaking and entering and malicious destruction of school property at the Deer Hill School Saturday.

The names of the youths were not released because of their ages.

Less than $100 was caused by the vandalism incident. Five classroom doors were broken and classroom desks were broken into.

At 4:36 p.m. Saturday the school's custodian Tom Jones called the Police Department and said he observed two youths inside the building. He was driving by the school when "he caught a glimpse of something." He investigated and the two youths fled. Jones gave Ptl. Jack Rhodes a description of the youths as Rhodes checked the building.

The youths entered Deer Hill by breaking a wooded vent in the boiler room.

Officer David Pomerico checked the wooded area behind the school and near the Music Circus. He found the youths there and brought them to the station. They were later released to their parents and were due in juvenile court session Tuesday.

The youths were charged with breaking and entering in the daytime and malicious destruction of property.

Custodians Robert Barrow and Tom Jones were busy early Monday sweeping up glass from five classroom windows.

Objects were found in the corridor, apparently dropped when the youths were discovered. Included were a Cross pen, many pieces of candy, pencils and pens, balls, stuffed animals and a china dog. When brought to the police stastion, the officers found several coins in their possession.

Custodian Richard Ainslie said several panes of wired glass would have to be specially ordered to replace the wired door glass which had been broken.

Principal Kenneth Ekberg, who visited the school Saturday to assess the damages, said that this sort of behavior is "aggravating."

Candidates answer the Mariner questions

Saturday, April 9 is the annual town election. For the offices of Planning Board, Board of Health, Sewer and Water Commissions, where there are two opponents running for one seat, the Mariner asked the candidates to respond to three questions.

These were the questions:

1. How will your occupation skills and past government or civic experiences help you in the position you are running for?

2. What do you think of the committee, board or commission you are running for? Is it now doing an adequate job of serving the community? What are its good points? Is there room for improvement? If so, where?

3. What are the three most important issues facing the board, committee or commission you are running for in the near future? How will you work to solve them?

Here are the responses by candidates.

BOARD OF HEALTH
LAURENCE J. MITCHELL

1. I believe that my 20 years' experience as a plumber and for the past eight years as operator of my own business, can be of invaluable service to the board of health and the town. Such experience in matters that occupy much of the board's attention is not now represented on the board. I am thoroughly familiar from first-hand experience, with septic systems in all parts of town. I know what the problems are, where the problems areas are, and what the solutions may be; what will work and what won't work. As the operator of a small business, I am dealing every day with suppliers, contractors, customers and the general public. I have to bargain, negotiate, comprise and supervise the work of others. This is useful experience for meeting the kind of situations faced by the board of health. While I have not held public office, my interest in public service is demonstrated by my service of over a year as a VISTA volunteer.

2. I do not wish to pick a fight with the present board because if I am successful, I will be working with two present members and hope we can work together harmoniously. I believe there is always room for improvement, and think that I can provide a practical, down-to-earth point of view that will be helpful.

3. As I see it, the three most important problems facing the board of health are (1) solid waste disposal, specifically the efficient and economic management of the dump; (2) approval of septic systems and pollution control; (3) proper enforcement of health regulations to achieve a balance between the letter of the law and reasonable performance.

I don't claim to have instant answers to all these problems, and prefer to wait until I have the information available to members of the board before making snap judgements, but I think I can provide a different point of view. In the case of the dump, it seems to me that changes are necessary soon if we are to avoid greatly increased costs, equipment breakdowns, and inconvenience to the public. I believe the cooperation between the board of health and the other town departments can be improved. Particularly there needs to be very close cooperation with the sewer commission in solving that serious problem since it is basically one involving health. Enforcement of the regulations should be carried out in a way to get the necessary results without antagonizing the public.

BARBARA KERN

1. Most recently, I bring to the Cohasset Board of Health a background and experience of the last two years as a member, and I am at present, chairman. During these two years I have become knowledgeable in the specific duties and responsibilities of board of health members. I have worked with the group which published the much-used "Legal Handbook for Boards of Health," and which helped form the Massachusetts Association of Health Boards, of which I am president.

I meet board of health members from cities and towns across the state and have had the opportunity to discuss problems and solutions with them. I have taken and continue to take, courses, and attend meetings specifically run for board of health members. In my role as president of the Massachusetts Association of Health Boards I work with knowledgeable persons in state and public health offices, who are a source of information for me, and through me for the town.

I have knowledge of other towns' actions, which may be helpful to Cohasset. For instance, I have worked with other towns and state personnel on a guideline for Cohasset's Hazardous Materials Committee.

I am aware of model by-laws in health-related areas and can help Cohasset's board to use them for the best results. I am also able to draft local input into proposed new state directives for landfills, sludge, etc. which could be beneficial to Cohasset.

2. The present board of health is a competent, hardworking board, which shares, among its members, the work load for the common good of the town. I believe the Cohasset Board of Health is doing an excellent job in serving the town. The board is willing to listen to citizens' problems and give them a fair hearing. Naturally, you cannot please all the people all of the time, but the board does what it believes is best for the town. A strong point is that the board is willing to work with other boards in the town, and I believe, works well with them.

One of the good points is the knowledge of where to find information if it is not readily at hand, and how to relate that knowledge to Cohasset's best use. The board and its agent make a great effort to answer each and every inquiry and complaint from citizens. I think townspeople have found the present board very helpful. Of course, there is always room for growth and improvement, and the board realizes that.

The board of health needs to keep up-to-date on legislation affecting it and its responsibilities. Every year bills are filed which could change the board's usefulness to the town. These bills are largely ignored or overlooked by towns. I continue to monitor legislation and bring it to the attention of the board for its input and recommendations. Also, there are proposed changes in existing regulations which need to be addressed by the board.

The board is working towards a weekly column or news release in the newspaper to keep citizens up-to-date on current happenings, such as clinics, renewal of permits, etc. I would like to see an even stronger forum for dispensing public health information. The present working relationship with the Cohasset Social Service League is smooth, and I believe, a success. As always, there is room for innovation and more projects, and these should be ongoing.

3. One of the issues facing the board of health is the continuing operation of the landfill area. The town has closed the old dump, and is now working a new expansion area. The orderly and most efficient use of this area will add to the life of the landfill. Once this is gone, we will have to use another manner of disposing of our trash. This problem is something that the board and the dump study committee will, I hope, work on together.

Another important issue is development in the town. Drainage problems and lack of suitable material for septic systems are a problem. As more innovative proposals come before the board a greater use of the board's engineering expert will be necessary.

At present, the sewer question is not resolved. There is a possibility that the board of health will need to work closely with the sewer commissioners on resolving the problems of alternative or innovative solutions to our problems. I will certainly work with the other board members on this.

Cohasset has a new cluster zone by-law which has already been utilized. This is another growing concern for the board of health, and one which needs serious consideration.

Hazardous materials are a growing concern to all towns and an issue which must be addressed. The committee which I initiated, and on which I serve as a representative of the board of health, is just beginning to start work. I believe this will be a great asset to the town.

consulting engineers, I believe I can bring to the commission the strong business background required to confront successfully the tasks of planning, design and construction of an affordable waste water disposal system for the entire town of Cohasset.

2. The present board has been directed by Town Meeting vote to expeditiously explore less costly alternatives to central sewers, a charge that cannot be taken lightly, a charge that fulfills the requirements of the Federal Clean Waters Act and its amendments. To date, the present board has been indifferent to this rsponsibility, has sought to maintain the present consulting firm with great potential cost to the town, while half-heartedly pursuing alternatives. The present board has recently submitted two articles for the annual town meeting which, in effect, could impede or terminate the entire process of arriving at a sensible, affordable solution. Cohasset deserves more. Cohasset must give our new consultant, Ward Engineering Associates, its full support while this firm seeks out less costly and more practical alternatives. We simply cannot afford to do less.

The present board is commencing to commit greater effort toward the proper maintenance of the present plant, including measures to reduce the sources of the inflow and infiltration (leaks, illegal storm drains, and sump pump connections) within the collection system. These measures combined with the application of water saving devices can help our present plant to operate within its discharge permit, reduce or eliminate pressure from the state and, hopefully, allow full business usage during the interim, while we develop an affordable waste disposal system for the entire town. I believe in these policies and will work to execute them.

3. As far as I am concerned, this issue of the implementation of "Article 4" completely dwarfs all other issues facing the board. Implementing Article 4 (exploring I/A solutions) of the November 29, 1982 Special Town Meeting is the issue of this campaign. This issue transcends all others. The design and construction of the Metcalf and Eddy facilities plan will literally destroy the financial viability of this community. Servicing its debt alone will amount to a minimum of $400,000 per year. This will wreak havoc in our schools (which are presently facing a short fall of $48,000) and will seriously impair all other essential town services. This proposed central sewering plan will cost a minimum of $575 per year home owner served. Alternatives to central sewers that we have investigated cost from $60 to $160 per year per home owner served — at no cost to the town. Alternative systems are subsidized 94 percent for design and construction. The six percent balance is so low that most communities chose to have the user bear the cost. Thus, our schools and town services would not be affected by the cost of sewerage treatment.

The present plan will service only 30 percent of the town in Phase I and ultimately when all three phases are completed about 52 percent of the town will be serviced. I find this plan patently unfair to those not

The tighter the braids, the stronger the character

By Lois Martin

Braids help shape your character. Really. You take a little girl, braid her hair for about 10 years and you've made a difference in her life that'll last.

Right off the top I can tell you that it makes you tough. I, a person from the old school of long braids, could be pulled by the hair of my head and not emit cries of pain. I might do something else in retaliation but my braid training taught me not to yelp when my hair's pulled.

Now that's important for a couple of reasons. When I used to sit for the morning braiding, everyone in the house was in a hurry. My hair was something to be done habitually, expediently with as little fuss or commotion as possible.

PATCHES

And you weren't to complain. If you attempted to , you were reminded "that didn't hurt." It was the classic dog/bell/saliva thing. So that eventually a comb through the meanest snarl in the world wouldn't evoke any fussing or whining, something little girls without braid training might not have learned so well.

My favorite picture of me, and believe me there aren't many 'cause they look like me, was one of my Brownie troop. There I sat in the front row, your standard Brownie, little sensible shoes, white anklets, chipped nail polish on the right index finger (naughty), my Brownie smile and my braids underneath my cap.

I was a swell Brownie, a proud one, best organization I ever belonged to and those were the central part of my braid days.

Thing was some of the other girls had the French braid style or the kind where there was a braid on each side of your crown and then two separate ones to hang back. I didn't have those. And I didn't have the little girlish curl on the end of my braids and I don't remember ribbons like Mary Grindle had, streaming in delicate pink from the braid.

I think I would have liked some of that fluff. My braids were the clean crisp utilitarian kind. Part that hair in the middle and braid like the devil till everything's in a proper place, tight and neat. It took you till recess till you could open your mouth wide without causing a pulling on the front of your head.

The thing I hated about my braids was that every now and then my sister would inveigle me to let her braid me. She'd promise to do it right but she didn't. On purpose, on purpose I tell you, Marilyn made my braids stick out like donkey ears. Then she'd howl with pleasure at her own handwork.

There was no sense seeking revenge for two reasons. For one thing I'm lousy with hair and for another Marilyn's hair was much shorter, little wisps of gentle curls framing her soft round face. Mine was long, straight as a string...needed to be braided.

Occasionally as I wound into 10 year-old sophistication, I'd decide I'd look pretty with the hair unbraided, flowing around my shoulders. I'd seen the other girls with their long flowing tresses. Me too.

Unfortunately, someone who wears braids all the time has that awful crinkled finger wave look, all straight on the ends. It was really disappointing to be the singular person to think you looked beautiful. So back to the braids, two brown rubber bands on the end.

It has been made clear to me that the only reason I've never had a daughter has something to do with my hair. Little girls apparently are awarded to women who'll do something special with hair. Mine, of course, is only part of my daily laundry, something to be fresh and clean...on its own, askew.

But there are a couple ways I'll exercise my unused desire to play with little girl's hair. For one thing I want a shot at my sister's and it'll be braided (upbraided) my way no matter what its length. And she's got two daughters with senses of humor who'll let me braid them.

And because of that character my own braids gave me, when I've laughed enough at the product I'll let Marilyn give me donkey ears one more time so long as she garnishes them with ribbons.

North River slide program

The Cranberry Marshfield chapter of the American Cancer Society will host a slide presentation about the North River by Dr. Uve Hublitz of Cohasset at the Bridgwaye Inn on March 27 at 4:30 p.m. Before the program, there wil be a cocktail hour with hot Hors D'Oeuvres provided.

Dr. Hublitz, who is a Brockton Hospital Radiologist, is donating his time for this presentation.

For many years Dr. Hublitz's work as an amateur wildlife photographer has been used by the Audubon Society magazine, The Smithsonian Institute, The Museum of Science, and The New England Aquarium. He has had a special exhibit at The Museum of Natural History, and his slides are part of a permanent collection at Cornell University.

While Dr. Hublitz's "hobby" has taken him as far away as the Rocky Mountains and Florida Everglades, this work is concentrated in Massachusetts.

A close freindship with Dr. Ronald Messer, a Marshfield resident living on the North River, has provided Hublitz with ample opportunity to photograph wildlife in the marshes and along the river's banks.

The program combines breathtaking photography of the river and its wildlife with colorful anecdotes and descriptions of the river's industrial and agricultural history.

Tickets for this program are $5 in advance, and $6 at the door. Available advance tickets can be obtained by calling Nancy Frazee: 834-4850, Linda Kennedy: 837-0257, or Pam Meyer:837-1289. Brodil's Bootery, Sadie's Sideboard and Jane's Beauty Nook also have advance tickets available.

served. The alternative systems approach will serve the entire town. It will address all waste water problems within the community.

The 13 consultants who responded to our request for proposals believe that Cohasset is being taken for a ride — a very expensive ride. Our Special Town Counsel believes similarly. I concur with these experts and say it's time to get off this ride, do something sensible that we can afford while conforming with the Federal Clean Waters Act.

SEWER COMMISSION
MAXWELL R. POUNDER

1. I am an architect with a practice of my own in Boston. My experience includes designing many building types, commercial, industrial, medical, educational and residential. Some of these buildings included on site, septic, disposal systems; one school required a large holding tank to pump during off peak hours into the town's undersized sewage system.

I also served as a member of a value engineering team that reviewed drawings and specifications for a major sewage disposal plant in Rhode Island. I employ consulting engineers to design various technical portions of buildings I am designing, evaluate their conclusions and make the final decisions.

I know the construction process from contracts, working plans and specifications, through construction supervision and guarantees.

Since the most important issue facing the sewer commission, and one of the most important facing the town, is to decide what type of waste water disposal system to build, and then to proceed with its construction. I believe my professional experience will be of considerable value.

2. The present board of sewer commissioners has existed with its present members for a little over two months following appointments to fill two vacancies. We are still in the process of dealing with many varied issues that come before us and trying to formulate consistent policies that will enable the plant to operate at levels near the limitations placed on it by the discharge permit issued by the state.

I am in the process of developing a process of voluntary conservation measures that will reduce the flow quantities coming to the plant. I am also in the process of re-evaluating the present system of apportioning the flow limitations of various buildings currently on the existing systems.

My primary concern is that the board remains balanced in its views and considers the needs of all portions of the town. To this end, it is important that a sewer advisory committee be formed soon that is representative of the various areas and needs that exist.

I am also very conscious that the opinions of the other two commissioners is split as to what direction the future solution of our waste water disposal problem should take. It is important that the third member of the board remains objective and is free to ask the specific questions that will challenge the proposed solutions and require that all important investigations are undertaken and required data is collected. Only through this process will we have enough reliable information to reach reasonable conclusions. I intend to follow that course.

3. The three most important issues facing the board of sewer commissioners are:

1. Maintaining the existing treatment plant in good operating condition.

2. Maintaining restrictions that will help to keep the discharge, from the plant into the harbor, at or near the minimum requirements of the state.

3. Determining the direction the town should take in attempting to solve its waste water (sewage and septage) disposal problems and find the most cost effective and permanent solution possible.

All three issues require diligence and creative problem solving. The most critical issue with the greatest long term impact is number three.

The basic problem is that we do not have enough definitive data to convince ourselves which one of the two options open to us, (1) new sewer plant and system, or (2) alternative methods, as yet undefined, is the most cost effective and permanent solution to our waste water management problems.

After all the studies that have been in past years, there is still insufficient data, based on actual on-site investigations, to determine if on-site alternative methods, septic tanks, leaching fields and their innovative applications, are viable.

We do know that state and federal funding for this approach applies only to systems currently failing or showing signs of probable failure. Not all systems within a given area will be funded. Averages run between 35 percent to 60 percent. No federal or state funds will be applied to systems that may fail in the future. Other alternative methods, upgrading the existing plant, a possible harbor outfall, and a new facility for treating septage, all have to be considered as part of the alternative approach.

Since no funding is currently available to do the necessary site investigation, I drafted article 35 for town meeting to appropriate enough money for preliminary investigations to determine if the alternative approach is viable.

The sewer system, including a new plant, proposed by the engineering firm of Metcalf and Eddy, Inc. will permanently solve our most pressing waste disposal problems. However, substantive data on its cost effectiveness as compared to alternative systems is not based on enough hard data to be conclusive. No borings have yet been done to determine actual piping costs.

All of this is compounded by a reduction of 20 percent in federal funding if working plans and specifications are not completed and approved by October of 1984. Costs for the town would increase by an additional 70 percent from approximately $2,900,000 to $5,000,000. In addition, the town has until April 11 to accept funds for working plans and specifications or lose its position on the states project priority list.

I have also drafted article 36 which will allow us to proceed with the collection of site data that will firm up cost estimates, and refine areas to be served by central sewers by proceeding with Metcalf and Eddy. The sewer commission has the authority to limit and stop the amount of work the engineers may do under the terms of the proposed contract.

I estimate six to eight weeks will be necessary to collect and analyze all the information and reach a decision based on data that is sound enough to convince the state that the course we choose is correct. If a sewer plant proves to be the best route, we will not have lost that option if we proceed in from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

To our readers, Margaret Ward has become a household name, for she has shared with us many recipes in the 10 years since this column began. By now, most of us know that the 85 year-old cooking enthusiast has won 89 ribbons for her goodies at the Marshfield Fair. She also loves to enter recipe contests, winning many awards. Who of us has not either made or been served her Cranberry Swirl Coffee Cake? Now a New England classic. She originated it for a Pillsbury Bake-Off in 1963 and won a plaque in recognition of her being one of 10 best bakers in the state. Just in case you've somehow missed it, here's Margaret's

CRANBERRY SWIRL COFFEE CAKE

1 stick margarine
1 c. sugar
1 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. baking soda
½ pt. sour cream
2 eggs
2 c. all-purpose flour
2 tsp. salt
1 tsp. almond flavoring
1 can whole cranberry sauce (7 oz.)
½ c. nuts, crushed

Cream margarine and sugar. Gradually add unbeaten eggs one at a time with mixer at medium speed. Reduce speed and add dry ingredients sifted together, alternately with sour cream, ending with dry ingredients. Add almond. Grease a 9" tube pan. Place layer of batter in bottom of pan. Swirl cranberry sauce on top. Add two more layers of batter and sauce. Sprinkle top with crushed nuts. Bake in 350 oven for 50-55 min.

GLAZE TOPPING

¾ c. confectioners sugar, 1 T warm water and ½ tsp. almond flavoring. Combine and drizzle over cooled cake.

The trouble is, though, Margaret's creation often wins a prize for somebody else. In a contest sponsored by a Boston paper, seven recipes for the above cake were entered, with the cash prize going to another women who changed from margarine to butter. A few years ago, a teen-ager won a trip to New York with the same recipe. Mrs. Ward is good-natured about learning of laurels her creation wins for others. The recipe below won her a watch and trophy at a prune and raisin contest held at the Sonesta Hotel in Cambridge and is called

PRUNE VELVET CAKE

½ c. margarine
1 c. sugar
2 eggs
2 c. all-purpose flour
1 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. baking soda
½ tsp. salt
½ tsp. each of nutmeg and cinnamon
¼ tsp. grated lemon rind
1 8-oz. carton vanilla-honey yogurt
1 c. cooked prunes, drained, pitted and cut into 3 pieces
½ c. chopped walnuts

Cream margarine and add sugar gradually at medium speed. Add unbeaten eggs, one at a time. Combine dry ingredients. At low speed add dry ingredients including lemon rind in three parts alternating with yogurt and ending with dry ingredients. Fold in prunes. Place in greased 9" tube pan. Sprinkle with nuts. Bake 50 min. at 350 degrees. Remove and cool 15 min. before turning out of pan to cool on rack. Prepare glaze by combining ¾ c. confectioners sugar, 1 T warm water and ¼ tsp. vanilla extract.

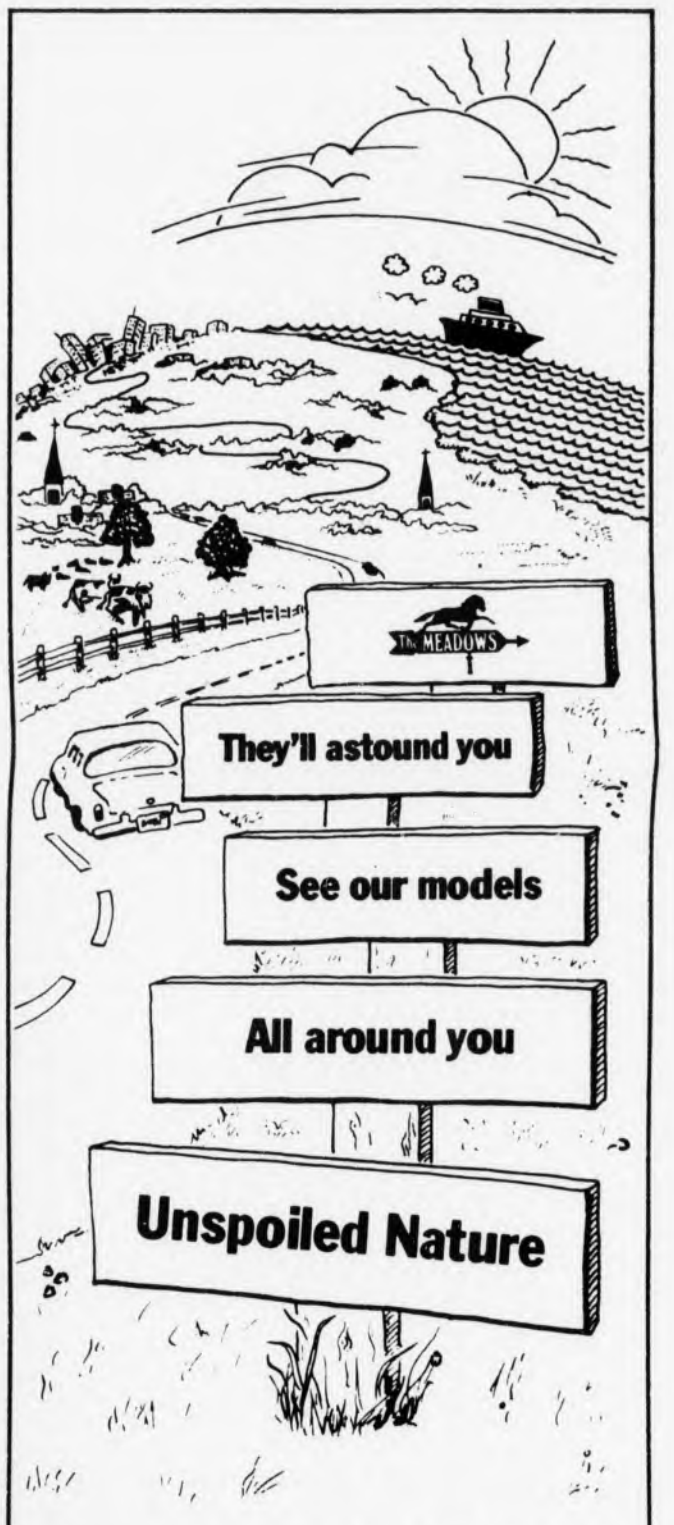
A little paperback Margaret sent me is a treasure, for it's a collection of recipes you meant to clip but didn't, or lost when cleaning out your kitchen drawer. Ceil Dyer has collected time-tested classics of the food industry, and called it "Best Recipes from the Backs of Boxes, Bottles, Cans and Jars." For instance, Kraft calls this scrumptious concoction one of their classics.

HOT CRABMEAT APPETIZER

1 8-oz. pkg. Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese
1 7½-oz. can drained crabmeat
2 T finely chopped onion
2 T milk
½ tsp. cream-style horseradish
½ tsp. salt, dash of pepper
½ c. toasted almonds

Spoon combined ingredients into 9" pie plate, sprinkle with nuts. Bake in 375 degree oven for 15 min. Makes 2 cups. Serve with Crax as spread, or dip for veg.

Temple service change



There will be no service at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom on March 25. Instead, a South Shore service will be held at Temple Sinai in Sharon at 8:30 p.m.

Rabbi Stephen Karol will be speaking on "Why Passover is so Popular" at the service for the First Day of Passover, March 29, at 10:30 a.m. There will be a Congregational Seder at the Temple at 6:30 p.m.

Living in the country is even better than it used to be. Lots of new comforts have been added—as you'll soon see when you visit The Meadows in Hingham.

This fine group of attached single family homes offers the spaciousness and fine construction of yesteryear with conveniences grandma never even contemplated. There are kitchens with sunny breakfast bays . . . lots of fireplaces . . . vaulted and tray ceilings . . . large private courtyards . . . 2-car garages . . . swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. The location, on wildflower-strewn meadows in the lovely town of Hingham, is idyllic.

Two and three bedroom homes range from $155,000 to $210,000 during our opening period. The furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take Exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment.

around town

☐Albert Kelley, Jr. recently addressed over 100 alumni volunteers during the Boston College National Telethon Kickoff Dinner. Kelley is chairman of the Fides Executive Committee at B.C. This committee is responsible for soliciting major contributions for Boston College.

During his presentation, he highlighted some of the major increases in Fides contributions of more than $1,000 per year. Kelley is a 1952 graduate of Boston College and is Treasurer at the John T. Clark Company in Boston.

☐The best bargain in town Saturday was the dinner "Chef" Rocco Laugelle prepared for the Legion. For 99 cents, diners got a live three-piece dance band and a St. Patrick's Day feast of corned beef, potatoes, carrots and boiled cabbage. Rocky used four pots and a large colander and the kitchen was spic and span by 9 p.m.

A few of those attending were Selectman Mary Jane McArthur, Izzy and Barron Salvador, Rev. John and Mary Benbow, Ken and Alna Ekberg, Carol and Russell Sandblom, Carol and Bob Ciciotte, Shawn and Peter Laugelle, Marsha and Richard Silvia, Helen Barrow, John and Robert Pattison, George McCullough, Clark Chatterton, Harold and Patricia Litchfield, Ed Mulvey and Bob Magna.

Dana Williams and Post Commander Joseph McLean kept busy carrying huge, steaming platters with full plates upstairs from the kitchen.

Rocky wore a red cap, but most of those present were "wearin' the green" clothing.

Rocky, who is famous for his hats, said recently that his collection amounts to about 175 now. "When friends travel, they often bring me back a new one," he said.

Information please . .

The libraries in Cohasset, Marshfield and Scituate are providing this column on questions asked at the libraries and on new information sources acquired. This week the column is written by Bruce Brigell, Reference Librarian at the Ventress Library in Marshfield.

Q. When should references to God be capitalized? I've seen cases where pronouns such as his and he have been both capitalized and left in lower case when referring to the diety; which usage is correct?

A. Authorities differ on the capitalization of pronouns employed to represent God. Two of the secretary's manuals checked stand by the capitalization of all pronouns used in this manner, however, a number of modern authorities, including the latest edition of the Chicago Manual of Style differ considerably. The more recent trend holds that pronouns utilized to represent God need not be capitalized unless its non-capitalization would cause an ambiguous reference within the sentence. The Chicago Manual of Style justifies this with the explanation that the over-capitalization of religious terminology "is probably due to an unanalyzed acceptance of the pious customs of an earlier age, to an unconscious feeling about words as in themselves numinous, or to fear of offending religious persons..."

Q. When did the Mormon Church outlaw polygamy?

A. The authorization of polygamy (the principle by which a man may have more than one wife) was outlawed by the Mormon church in 1890, concurrent with the decision of the United States Supreme Court that the practice was illegal.

Q. Is the Cranberry Station of the State Agricultural Extension Service still in operation? If so where is it located?

A. Yes, the Cooperative Extension Bureau of the University of Massachusetts maintains the Cranberry Station which is located on Glen Charlie Road in East Wareham, their telephone number is 295-2212.

Q. I have heard that there is a monument in upstate New York which contains only a statute of a left leg. Does such a monument exist?

A. Yes, the People's Almanac describes the "Monument to a left leg" located on the Revolutionary War Battlefield in Saratoga, New York. Sculptured on a marble slab are a cannon, an epaulet, a wreath and a military boot for a man's left leg. The monument is dedicated to the memory of "The most brilliant soldier of the Continental Army who was desperately wounded on this spot..." This hero of the Battle of Saratoga is never named on the monument primarily because he was later to turn traitor, his name was Benedict Arnold.

Q. Is there a word for a lover of words?

A. The only term we could find with this exact meaning is the term "logophile" which is formed from the Greek roots logos, for word or thought and philos, for one who loves. The word logophile, however, appeared only in the St. Martin's Roget's Thesaurus, not in any of the standard English dictionaries, so its usage, although quite logical as a construction, is by no means standard.

Rotary road race set for Sunday

The Rotary Club sponsored Roadrace-By-The-Sea will begin at 1 p.m. Sunday, March 27 at the Cohasset Common.

Several thousand spectators are expected to gather on the Common and along the race route to watch the 800 registered runners compete in the 6.2 mile race along Cohasset's Atlantic Avenue and Jerusalem Road.

The race will begin on South Main St., in front of the Community Center promptly at 1 p.m. It will proceed along South Main Street, up Elm Street towards Cohasset Harbor, follow Margin St. to Atlantic Ave., past Sandy Beach, merge onto Jerusalem Road along the coast, follow Forest Ave. to North Main Street and follow North Main back to the Common, ending at the finish line in front of the Town Hall.

Selectmen and race committee co-chairmen Peter Logan and Roy Fitzimmons have issued a special plea to all dog owners to keep their pets on a leash or restrained at home. At last year's race, one runner escaped serious injury when tripping over a dog at the finish line. Although the Town Dog Officer will be present this year at the finish line, pet owners along the race route are asked to cooperate with the committee and restrain their pets while the runners pass by their homes.

Check-in times for race participants who sent in the required pre-registration forms will be Saturday, March 26 from 9 a.m. to noon, and Sunday, before the race, from 9 a.m. to noon, at the Cohasset Town Hall. Runners will receive their free blue and white race T-shirts and official race numbers, which establish their starting position.

All runners must have sent registration forms prior to the March 21 deadline in order to compete in this year's race. Unofficial runners will not be allowed to pass the finish line, as this will interfere with the individual computerized race results which will be available to each official runner.

In addition to the refreshment stands which will be available this year, spectators and runners will be entertained with video-tape replays of the race while waiting for the official tabulations and statistics.

Softball league meetings begin March 28

The Scituate Men's Softball League announces that weekly meetings will begin March 28. The time is 7 p.m. weekly at the American Legion Post at Cohasset Harbor Monday nights.

Anybody interested in forming a team for this season is welcomed to attend. Rules and regulations will be discussed.

This season is scheduled to begin Wednesday, June 1. Sixteen to 18 teams are expected to vie for the eight play-off positions for the championship.

League President Danny O'Connell said at a preliminary meeting, "We expect the 1983 season to be the most exciting season yet."

accord with article 36. If the alternative systems prove most effective we will quickly develop an overall plan using that approach.

Regardless of which route we ultimately take, I will continue to pursue the course of making intelligent decisions based on sound engineering data.

I will maintain my independence to review the facts as they are presented. I will be unwilling to accept half-developed conclusions. I will ask the hard questions and demand complete answers. I will adequately prepare myself and the town to make the correct decision.

WATER COMMISSION
PETER J. PRATT

1. Proper management of the Cohasset Water Department, a municipally owned utility, requires commissioners with skills gained from both the private and public sectors.

Business management experience and training is needed for a full understanding of the financial problems facing the town's waterworks. Simultaneously, federal and state policies relating to funding, regional planning and environmental protection necessitate knowledge of the governmental process.

My work in the cable television industry has taught me the essentials of utility management: capital planning, rate setting, system operation and the projection of return on investment.

Experience in the political process and academic training in government has allowed me to develop a working relationship with the present state administration and the Massachusetts congressional delegation.

I am a candidate for the Cohasset Water Commission because I want to use my knowledge of government and industry for the benefit of the town.

2. The present board of water commissioners and the staff of the water department deserve credit for the operation of the system under often adverse conditions.

It has been the task of this current board to manage the five year-old reservoir and treatment facility, built at a cost of $2.8 million, during the critical period of system turn-on and initial operation. The new plant brought with it new problems of manpower training and scheduling, higher operational costs, and added demands on a distribution system comprised of aging underground mains.

Given the complexities of managing a public utility which is composed of both state of the art technology and an antiquated delivery facility, our water department does indeed do a good job of serving the community.

As in any enterprise, public or private, there is room for improvement and a need for increased efficiencies in the management of the department.

Outlined below are my suggestions for the solution of the system's most pressing financial problems.

3. The three most important issues facing the water commission are the related problems of escalating debt, overcapacity of the treatment facility, and capital spending required to rehabilitate sections of the distribution system.

The department is now $350,000 in debt to the town, a figure which includes unpaid construction loads of $206,000. If we can't collect outstanding water bills, now at a level of $120,000, the department's accumulated deficit will stand at over $400,000 at the end of this fiscal year.

Water department borrowing from the general fund is officially accounted as an accumulated interest-free loan. In the era of Prop. 2½, however, when revenues — and therefore expenditures — are frozen by law, continued borrowing actually amounts to a hidden tax; the taking of money from revenues available to other departments.

The major factor contributing to yearly deficits is the heavy load of debt service carried by the department. We now spend almost $190,000 per year on construction bonded indebtedness, a figure equal to 40 percent of annual revenues.

Although bond payments for our new treatment plant account for the system's single greatest expense, we are not getting a proper return on our investment. On average, the plant functions at only about 30 percent capacity. Designed to pump a maximum of three million gallons per day, the plant averages a daily load of about 700,000 and peak daily capacities of 1.3 million gallons. Revenues, derived from sales to water customers, thus are not sufficient to meet debt-encumbered expenses. The solution to this problem of unused capacity is to increase water sales and revenues.

A properly planned and managed program of selling water across town lines could return operating profits sufficient, over several years, to pay off department loans due Cohasset's general fund. Eventually, increased revenues could be used to stabilize or lower customer rates.

Cohasset's abundant supply of water is a rare commodity in this area of Massachusetts. Neighboring Plymouth County towns are facing severe water shortages. Water demand in the North River basin area will grow as population increases in the region.

We must begin now to develop business management and engineering systems to wholesale water, via presently existing connections to the Scituate system, into Plymouth County.

With increased revenues gained from increased sales, the water commission can design a capital outlay schedule aimed at replacing old water mains. Until we substantially increase the department's income, we cannot undertake a large replacement program.

PLANNING BOARD
FRANK C.J. HAMILTON

1. Over the past seven years, I have served Cohasset in both volunteer and paid capacities and am familiar with the town, its governing structure and departments.

Since serving as an Army officer from 1968-1975, I have always endeavored to anticipate long-term needs and solutions.

As a 1981 Stonehill College graduate, I majored in public administration. Couses taken in urban and rural planning, sociology and economics will benefit me as an individual working for the community on the planning board.

2. I feel that any committee is working to serve the community's best interests, as they are elected to do and I look forward to serving with them in resolving

Advisory Board supports water main borrowing

The advisory committee is expected to approve borrowing $220,000 in State House notes, which will be combined with a state grant, to replace several old water mains.

These mains, some dating to 1900, would be replaced along Margin Street and Atlantic Avenue from Elm Street to the Cunningham Bridge.

The cost of the project is $395,225, according to Town Accountant Bill Signorelli. The state will contribute an estimated $174,612 and if approved at town meeting, the town's share will be $220,613.

Sigorelli is proposing a 10-year financing through State House notes which saves about $10,000 in bonding costs.

Signorelli said State House notes were used when the town purchased the railroad property, and for the landfill purchase.

Recently, the water commissioners said the work was essential. About 48 percent of the water is lost from leaks. In addition, water pressure is poor and doesn't meet fire department regulations.

The water commissioners presented two options to the advisory board. The first option was to correct problems along Margin Street and Atlantic Ave. from Elm Street to Nichols Road.

The town would spend or borrow $342,000 for that proposal. Advisors chose the second option with the recommended borrowing of $220,000

In a related matter, Signorelli told advisors the water department is running an operating deficit of $338,000. Almost one-third, or $120,000, is caused by overdue water bills.

Advisory board member Steve Bartow said besides the lack of collection of revenues, the department had an outstanding debt construction loan. He added that the plant is too large for the system's needs, expensive to finance and costly to operate. The town has a limited land area so the water department is limited in expansion potential.

In addition, Bartow and advisor Jim Lagrotteria said the town's water rates are the second highest in the area.

Other topics to be examined by the water department and the advisory committee are contacting other towns to see if they would purchase excess water or formation of a regional water district.

FRIDAY, APRIL 1
GOOD FRIDAY — NO SCHOOL

Non-tenured teachers

The school committee gave approval to School Supt. Eugene Crowell to notify nine non-tenured teachers of non-renewal of contracts. Crowell said this is a formality and he hopes all nine teachers will be able to return next school year. If these teachers were not notified by April 15, contracts must be offered.

Computer contract signed by selectmen

Selectmen awarded $87,000 for the purchase of an in-house computer system for the town. The contract was awarded to Data National Corp. of Hingham.

The November 1982 special town meeting appropriated $90,000 for the purchase of a computer system to be used for the town's accounting and budgeting purposes.

According to Cohasset Town Accountant William Signorelli, the computer system will be phased in, although eventually all of the town's new accounting system will be computerized.

The tax collector's office will have all property taxes, motor vehicle excise taxes, ambulance, and mooring fees on the computer system.

The next office to go on line will be the town clerk's office which will utilize the computer for voter registration, census, and street listings.

The assessor's office will have a computer terminal to maintain current status of property taxes and to generate property tax bills. The program will have the capability to maintain property values at current tax levels, Signorelli said.

The school department will utilize three terminals, and will have the entire business office under computerization. The system will also be used to record data regarding attendance, scheduling and report grading.

The water department will have monthly bills programmed into the system. It will also record all payments and be able to receive current status on those payments.

Signorelli said some of the system's applications will be programmed into the computer system by July 1. The remaining applications will be phased into the computer by the end of this year.

Signorelli said as a member of the computer study committee which recommended Data National to selectmen, he was very pleased and excited about the town's entrance into the computer age.

He, along with the board of selectmen, wished to thank John and Marilyn Keane for their extensive participation and leadership in helping to select a computer system for the town.

Signorelli said committee member James Hall also proved valuable in the committee's final recommendation.

Cohasset Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said the computer system should arrive within 60 days.

High school sewage cost

Recent statements by school committee member Richard Conley and an inference in the Mariner survey that the town charges the school system for the high school sewage handled by the sewer plant are incorrect. Advisory board member, Jacqueline Dormitzer, and Town Accountant William Signorelli, said the town absorbs the cost. The school system is billed for repairs to its pump at the high school.

Signorelli said that because the water department is a self-supporting agency, in order for the town to receive reimbursements under Ch. 70, the schools must be charged for their water.

Future agenda items

Besides a cable television report and its impact on the school system, Supt. Crowell is planning a curriculum update session, and a review of the grade warning system and attendance and tardiness records.

the pressing issues of Cohasset's growth.

3. The people of Cohasset must decide now, as to what extent they wish the town to grow. Decisions and commitments made now and during the next five years of this term will direct us through the turn of the century.

Further expansion must address the severe limitations of Cohasset's geography .

The charm and character that is Cohasset, left unconsidered, could be lost to urbanization.

Jack Worley says every town needs a recreation director

In an interview, Cohasset Recreation Director John Worley does not believe a town recreation department can exist without a full-time director.

"Proposition 2½ has made cuts everywhere, but recreation departments have been among the hardest hit. A full-time director can dedicate more time to soliciting and training volunteers, and that saves a lot of money," Worley said.

The Cohasset Recreation Department operates on a $35,000 annual budget, $19,000 of which is Worley's salary. It employs 100 part-timers, but relies strongly on the near 150 volunteers that Morley organizes.

"A recreation department can generate with proper leadership and the use of volunteers. As long as the matrix is there, a $35,000 budget can be as useful as a $150,000 budget.

"A full-time director is well worth the cost, since they can reap back much more than their salary," Worley said.

Worley said in Marshfield, where they have gone on and off from year to year with a full-time director, the existence of the director has "literally meant the existence of the department. Every year they cut (the director) out, the department ceased to exist."

And in Scituate, he said, the town is suffering without a full-time director.

"We have a tremendous response from Scituate residents of all ages (to take part in Cohasset recreation activities). We take them in if there is any room after the Cohasset registration, but we usually have to turn some away. Based on what I've seen, there definitely is a need for (a full-time director) in Scituate."

Another major concern of a full-time director is to keep in touch with the community's needs, Worley said.

"We do surveys of all ages, and our programs change as the needs indicate. By keeping in constant tune with the changing attitudes in the community, (a full-time director) can adapt the (recreation) department to them."

Jack Worley

Worley stressed that a good Recreation Dept. benefits all ages. "Cohasset supplies recreation and leisure activities for all ages. People think that recreation departments are for the youth, but it goes much farther than that."

But one of Worley's main concerns is providing constructive activities for teenagers. "The more alternatives we give the 13 to 19 year-olds, the better chance there is that their time will be occupied in constructive ways.

"Since they tend to shy away from any kind of structured activities, we try to give them independence within a structure. Activities like open gym, and of course ski trips, give them the feeling of independence while they're actually in a structured and well-chaperoned activity."

Worley has been Director of Cohasset Recreation since the position was developed seven years ago. Since then he has watched Marshfield struggle with a confused department, and Hingham build with a partially organized department.

Hingham has added a part-time director, "and that's a start," Worley said. "But no department can exist without a full-time director."

Teacher review needed

Acting School Committee Chairman Jack Langmaid asked high school principal Richard Streeter to have the faculty examine these questions: Should examinations be considered part of a student's class rank? Langmaid said now the rank is determined by a four-term grade and examinations are not considered. Should a student who earns four "A's" and a "C" be allowed on the Honor Roll? Should the high school allow a pass-fail grade in some English electives? Should a student be allowed to enter a sequential course with a grade of "D?" Should public speaking be a mandatory course for all students?

At the Cohasset Community Center...

Watch your mailbox for the Spring/Summer program of the Cohasset Community Center. Save the schedule, arriving next week, for reference to the activities, courses and workshops beginning in April, and continuing through August.

Most courses now being held are continuing. Reappearing are many popular seasonal courses, such as riding, tennis and soccer. New Spring offerings include baton twirling, pinata making, new basket workshops, fresh flower arranging, furniture refinishing, beginning bridge, and consumer auto repair.

Babysitting readiness comes in time for summer job preparation. Older students can prepare for their SAT's and English Achievements with thorough review courses.

Interior design and landscape design both return in time for spring projects. Bargello is a new craft being offered, and special sewing classes on pants and jeans, and swimwear construction will enhance a sewer's summer wardrobe. Good cooks will love both a new hors d'oeuvres workshop and a mussell preparation evening.

Courses in model confidence and poise are being offered on levels appropriate to grades 4-6 and 7-9. Appearance, carriage, grooming and personality projection are taught by a television model who stresses the importance of the whole person developing, not simply the outside view. She will also teach social graces to younger children, grades K-3.

Two new types of workshops will also be offered: a one-day confrontation with technology, "Computers Without Fear," and a three-day broadcasting production experience, "Community Video Workshop."

Women's self defense, offered to women and teens, may be especially appropriate for a high school senior about to leave for college.

The Cohasset Community Center office is open daily from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at 3 North Main St.; telephone, 383-0088.

All eight students who auditioned were accepted. Congratulations go to alto, Amanda Sweeney; and baritones, Peter Baker, Karl Becker, Michael Cox, Andrew Glasfeld, Joseph Mazza, Shanti Shipsky and Dave Thomas.

The seven young men constitute the largest number of male vocalists to be accepted for one festival in many years from Cohasset.

The 1983 Jr. High SEMSBA Music Festival will be held at Hull High School May 6 and 7.

PRIMITIVE ARTIST VISITS DEER HILL

Jeanne Replogle, a primitive artist, visited all the Deer Hill students from 8:45 to 11:45 a.m. Tuesday, March 22. Replogle gave a lecture and slide show, and in addition, demonstrated the differences between primitive painting and realistic and modernistic art.

Replogle's visit was organized by Judy Volungis, Deer Hill representative of the PSO Arts Enrichment Committee.

Classes compete in creative writing contest

The students in Mrs. Cisneros' sixth grade language arts classes recently competed in a month-long creative story writing contest. Stories were submitted anonymously each week and judged by other sixth grade students and teacher.

Top prize winners from Mr. Becker's homeroom were: First Place, Katie Murphy; Second Place, Celia Mullen; and Third Place, Felecia Bartow and Bonnie Laskey.

The winners from Mr. Deaken's homeroom included: First Place, Arthur Meacham and Allison Reilly; Second Place, Kristen Maki; and Third Place, Kristen Ellinger, Paul Marks, Jennifer Martin and Eileen O'Connor.

Mrs. Cisneros' homeroom winners were: First Place, Amy Hobbs; Second Place, Erin Gregory and Matthew Kuhn; and Third Place, Danny Farwell and Leanne Sestito.

Several other students received honorable mention awards. They were: Alexis Bowen, Craig Carter, Alison Crehan, Suzi Kecskemety, Nancy Riley, Christine Rooney, Andrew Rossi, Missy Wetzell and Desiree Yess.

Also, Jennifer Ciarmataro, Paul Froio, Erinn Isele, Mike Suhrbier, Matthew Biggan, Elizabeth Hurley, Leslie McGee, Brian Ormiston, Marc Walgemann and Jessica Zaslow.

Deer Hill Principal, Ken Ekberg, presented the students' awards and congratulated them at a school assembly February 18.

At the South Shore Art Center...

SUNDAY SERIES

Picasso, an artist whose work spans a lifetime and whose influence is worldwide, will be the focal point for the South Shore Art Center's last Sunday at the Center series, March 27.

Art historian Dr. Paul Tucker will give a dual slide presentation, "Picasso — Innovator in a World of Change," from 3-5 p.m. Advanced registration is required.

Dr. Tucker, an assistant professor at the University of Massachusetts, Boston, will examine Picasso's continuing dialogue with art history and his own times. His expertise as a 20th century art specialist will help his audience understand Picasso's extraordinary contributions to art and his creative vision to be at the forefront of a new era in art.

PHOTOGRAPHY CLASSES

Students enrolled in the South Shore Art Center's photography courses can learn to experiment with their camera and achieve desired results. Registration for photography courses, which begin the week of March 28, may be made at the Center, 103 Ripley Road, or by phone, 383-9548.

The photography courses include subject matter, camera shooting techniques and darkroom developing and printing procedures.

Two courses, beginning and intermediate photography taught by John Goldie, an award winning photographer with several South Shore newspapers, combines picture taking with darkroom developing and printing.

Paul Fortin's photography course zeroes in on composition and subject matter such as portraits, sports, people, landscape, etc. and discussion and critique of composition, aesthetics and approach.

Goldie's students need 35 mm cameras and black and white film. Both courses begin March 31 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Fortin, a freelance photographer, lecturer and reviewer, will teach his students to use their cameras effectively and more creatively. Students will be working with color and black and white film. Darkroom developing will be available for black and white film.

LANDSCAPE DESIGN

Mary Smith's Introduction to Landscape Design, which proved to be a success during the winter semester, teaches students that landscape architecture is more than just planting flowers and shrubs; it is a way of creating a feeling with an exterior environment.

The course, which meets Saturdays beginning April 2 from 1-3:30 p.m., will also give students a chance to work on a particular landscape problem.

Smith is a graduate of Harvard's School of Landscape Architecture and a residential and commercial landscape architect.

STAINED GLASS

New to the spring schedule is a stained glass workshop taught by Dana Buck, stained glass instructor for Newton Community Schools. She is currently working on an M.A. at Mass. College of Art. The course, which meets Mondays beginning March 28 from 3-5:30 p.m., is designed to introduce students to the creative and technical aspects of stained glass.

YOUNG ARTISTS

Courses for high school artists include portfolio preparation, introduction to 3-D and mixed media workshop.

Elementary age classes include classes in clay, sketching, painting and drawing workshops.

Contact the Center at 383-9548 for the full schedule of courses.

Watercolor exhibition

The South Shore Art Center is sponsoring an exhibition of watercolors by Janet Blagdon at the Quincy Co-operative Bank Galleria, Rte. 3A, Cohasset. This is the fiftieth in a series of New England artists' exhibitions at the bank.

Blagdon lives in Needham and in Scituate in the summer. She received her B.S. from Boston State College and her M.S.A.Ed. from Mass. College of Art. She also studied at Otis Art Institute in Los Angeles. She is an exhibiting artist at the South Shore Art Center.

The show is open to the public during banking hours and will continue through March and April.

Handcrafted Easter baskets

Handcrafted baskets for Easter are available at the South Shore Art Center.

Gallery artist and weaver Donna Kelly has specially decorated her handcrafted baskets for the Easter holiday. The baskets make up beautifully as table centerpieces or the family Easter basket filled with goodies.

Reasonably priced, the baskets may be purchased at the Art Center, 103 Ripley Road.

PERSONALS

THANK YOU, St. Jude. C.K. (3/23)

THANK YOU, St. Jude, for answering my prayers. KMS. (3/23)

THANK YOU, St. Jude, for answering many prayers. Oh Holy St. Jude, Apostle and Martyr, great in virtue and rich in miracles, near kinsman of Jesus Christ, faithful intercessor of all who invoke your special patronage. In time of need to you, I have recourse from the depth of my heart, and humbly beg to whom God has given such great power to come to my assistance. Help me in my present urgent petition. In return I promise to make your name known and cause you to be invoked. Say three Our Fathers, three Hail Marys and Glorias. Publication must be promised. St. Jude pray for us all who invoke your aid. Amen. This Novena must be said for 9 consecutive days. Christine. (3/23)

DON'T TRY TO KEEP UP WITH THE JONESES. PASS THEM.

Following trends is easy.
Setting them, however, takes a little more imagination. The kind of sixth sense that can appreciate innovation before it becomes fashionable.
Case in point: the Saab 900 Turbo. For some time, car mavens have admired its exhilarating power and performance (not to mention more mundane features like room and economy and comfort). More recently, even publications like The New York Times have seen fit to print its praises. Which may explain why now the Saab Turbo is increasingly seen pulling into the more elegant driveways of America.
Even the Joneses are starting to take notice.
But given the Saab Turbo's acceleration of 0-60 in 9.6 seconds, they'll have a pretty tough time keeping up.

Satuit Bowlaway report...

By Don Dwyer

Sunday Nights Mixed Doubles reports the team of the Dreamers are leading the league by three points over the Officers Club. Bonnie, Jim and Frank Namieka are on the winning team. (Nothing like keeping it in the family, they say.) Individual scores are something to behold with Jr. Torrey leading all the men with a super, classy, out of orbit 125.6, followed by Pete Mitton's excellent 113.7, and Ray Riddle holds third spot with 110.6. On the other side of the ledger Pat Torrey has the women's High Average with a classy 106.3, followed by Karen Mitton's 105.1. (Pat, you'd better keep your eye on Karen.) And Patty Sunnerberg holds Third with a 99.1. Other outstanding individual efforts are Pat Torrey, 150; Carol Castagnetti, 142; and Karen Mitton, 138 for the three High Singles. High Triples have Carol Castagnetti with 367, Pat Torrey, 355; and Patty Sunnerberg with 345. Jr. Torrey has both High Single, 186, and High Three of 448. Ray Riddle has both Second High Single, 178, and Second High Three of 411. Pete Mitton, Third High Single of 176, and Randy Ellis, Third High Three with 386. (You need both a calculator and five computers to keep these terrific scores.) Something else, I'd say, these Sunday Nighters.

Monday Nights Marshfield Men's League has their cash jackpot up to $120. (They add on 10 each night who will be the lucky bowler.) Two teams are tied for First Place in the Northern Division. Both M.A. Lopes Const. and Marshfield Pharmacy have records of 107 wins and 93 losses. The Marshfield Auto Body leading the Southern Division with a record of 122 wins and 78 losses. The top 10 High Averages are Howie Phillips, 120.6; Larry Jenkins, 119.8; Rip Van Winkle, 117.6; Larry Nangle, 116.1; Ron Burrell, 112.3; Phil James, 111.1; Mel Westerman, 110.9; John Frazier, 110.8; Bill Kenyon, 110.1; and Gilly Kent, 110.0. The High Single 179 and High Three 447 are both held by Old Rip Van Winkle. (Just like cheese gets better with age.) Mel Westerman has Second High Single of 170, and Larry Jenkins, Second High Three with 444. Howie Phillips has both Third High Single, 169, and 430 for Third High Three. (With these scores they must all be drinking "Lite" beer. What a commercial!) Highlights from last week were Carl Mortenson, 365; Gilly Kent, 360; Pete Lucas, 356; Larry Jenkins, 355; and Jim Collins, 353. Super bowling from everyone. Keep those scores rolling in, fellows.

Friday Nights Knights of Columbus Mixed Doubles has the Shawnees leading all in the second half and heading down the homestretch. The winners consist of Pat and Jack Sheehan and Mary and Frank Wisdom. Individual honors go to Ginny Knox who has High Three of 335 and High Single with 135. Jack O'Brien has the men's High Three, 392; and George Duggan the High Single with 143. Good bowling from all, as you can see. The ladies three High Averages are Ginny Knox, 96.5; Detrie Vacha, 949; and Marge McGilvray, 92.7. The three from the men's division are Paul Maginnis, 108.3, George Duggan, 105.1 and Jack O'Brien, 104.7. Bobby and Ed Mankewich are doing a wonderful job as Officers and we at the Bowlaway thank you.

Thursday Mornings Coffee and Donut League has the Sankas leading all with 38 wins and 26 losses, three points ahead of the Yubans. The High Average race is really something else, with Priscilla Sindone holding on with 98.9 and Marie Merritt closing strongly with a 98.7. (A whisker between these two bowlers.) Last week's Star has to go to Terry Smith who turned in both High Single, 129, and High Triple of 319. (Good bowling, Terry.) Kathy Gilroy bowled well with a 126 and a 300 total. All of Thursday Morning bowlers have improved greatly and The Bowlaway hopes you all continue to do well.

Tuesday Mornings Ivy League reports the Diamonds still in First Place by two points over the Sapphires with 51 wins and 29 losses. The next two teams, the Rubys and Garnets, are really making a fight to gain the lead — both only nine out of First Place. (Could be a four-way tie at season's end.) With a few weeks to go the Doubles Strikes are still rolling in with 50 of them within reach for a league record. (That record would sure be something and I mean something else.) Ten bowlers have reached the average of over the hundred mark, and this also is a credit to all for their outstanding bowling. Pat Torrey leads all with a creditable 109.0, followed by Sandy Heartley's 107.9, Priscilla Shea, 103.5; Karen Mitton, 102.8; Linda Zimmer, 102.5; Kip Ahearn, 101.7; Charlene Ketterer, 101.5; Beverly Lembo, 100.6; Peg Barton, 100.1; and Lois Babbitt with 100.0. Last week's highlights had Priscilla Sindone leading them all with 338, followed by Kip Ahearn's 326, Beverly Lembo, 321; Sandy Hartley, 319; Joyce Kibbe, 315; Priscilla Shea, 309; Linda Zimmer, Marie Merritt and Midge Kuntz, 308; Carol Castagnetti and Joan Donahue, 304; and Charlene Ketterer, 301. (Nothing but 300 bowlers and double strikes from these classy girls.) Happy Hooligan to all. See you next week. (Summer league openings are available now.)

Smith College bus trip set for April 7

The Smith College admissions office and the South Shore Smith Club are pleased to announce the annual Precollege Day Bus Trip to the Smith College campus will be held Thursday, April 7.

Precollege Day at Smith is directed toward high school juniors who are considering a liberal arts education at a women's college. The program provides an excellent opportunity for students to acquaint themselves with the school and with the application and admission process.

This year Precollege Day is again scheduled on a weekday, when college is in full session, to provide a more accurate picture than is possible on a Saturday.

The South Shore Smith Club will sponsor the chaperoned bus trip to the college, for which a nominal fee will be charged. Lunch in residential houses on campus will be provided at no extra charge.

Reservations for this trip will be taken on a first-come, first-served basis. Information required for reservation must include the name, address and telephone number for both the student and her parents, as well as the name of the student's high school. The $10 fee, payable by check to Linda Jones, no later than April 1, must accompany each reservation. Please mail to: Linda Jones, 179 East St., Hingham, 02043, 749-3128.

In addition to the reservation information, it is requested that each student bring with her on April 7 a simple note of permission, signed by her parent or guardian. In the event of an emergency, medical or mechanical, the Club would like to be certain that parents are aware that their daughters are travelling to Smith, and when they may be expected to return weaving techniques at Community Center. Kelly's baskets are on sale at Art Center for special Easter treats.

Newcomers fashion show

This year's Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Fashion Show will feature clothes from Johnny Appleseed's for a "Weekend on the South Shore." A 11:30 a.m. luncheon of chicken or scrod is planned for Wednesday, April 13.

The Fashion Show is a fundraiser with proceeds going to the scholarship fund to benefit high school students from both Scituate and Cohasset.

Tickets are on sale through all board members, Ann Gill, 383-6753, and Virginia Hanley, 545-5171.

If you knew the facts about leasing, you'd never buy a car again!

For some unknown reason, the many advantages of leasing a car versus buying one continues to be one of the best kept secrets in the automobile business. Furthermore, a longstanding misconception states that you have to own or be in a business to lease a car. Not true! Anyone can lease. And most people should.

Come in and let us prove to you that leasing is truly the intelligent alternative to buying a car.

Now the computer invades the service station

By Jane Lane

The computer age has entered the local service stations.

With the arrival of sophisticated emissions testing required for new auto inspections, and the technological hardware contained in late model cars, the local grease monkey has been transformed into a data processing technician.

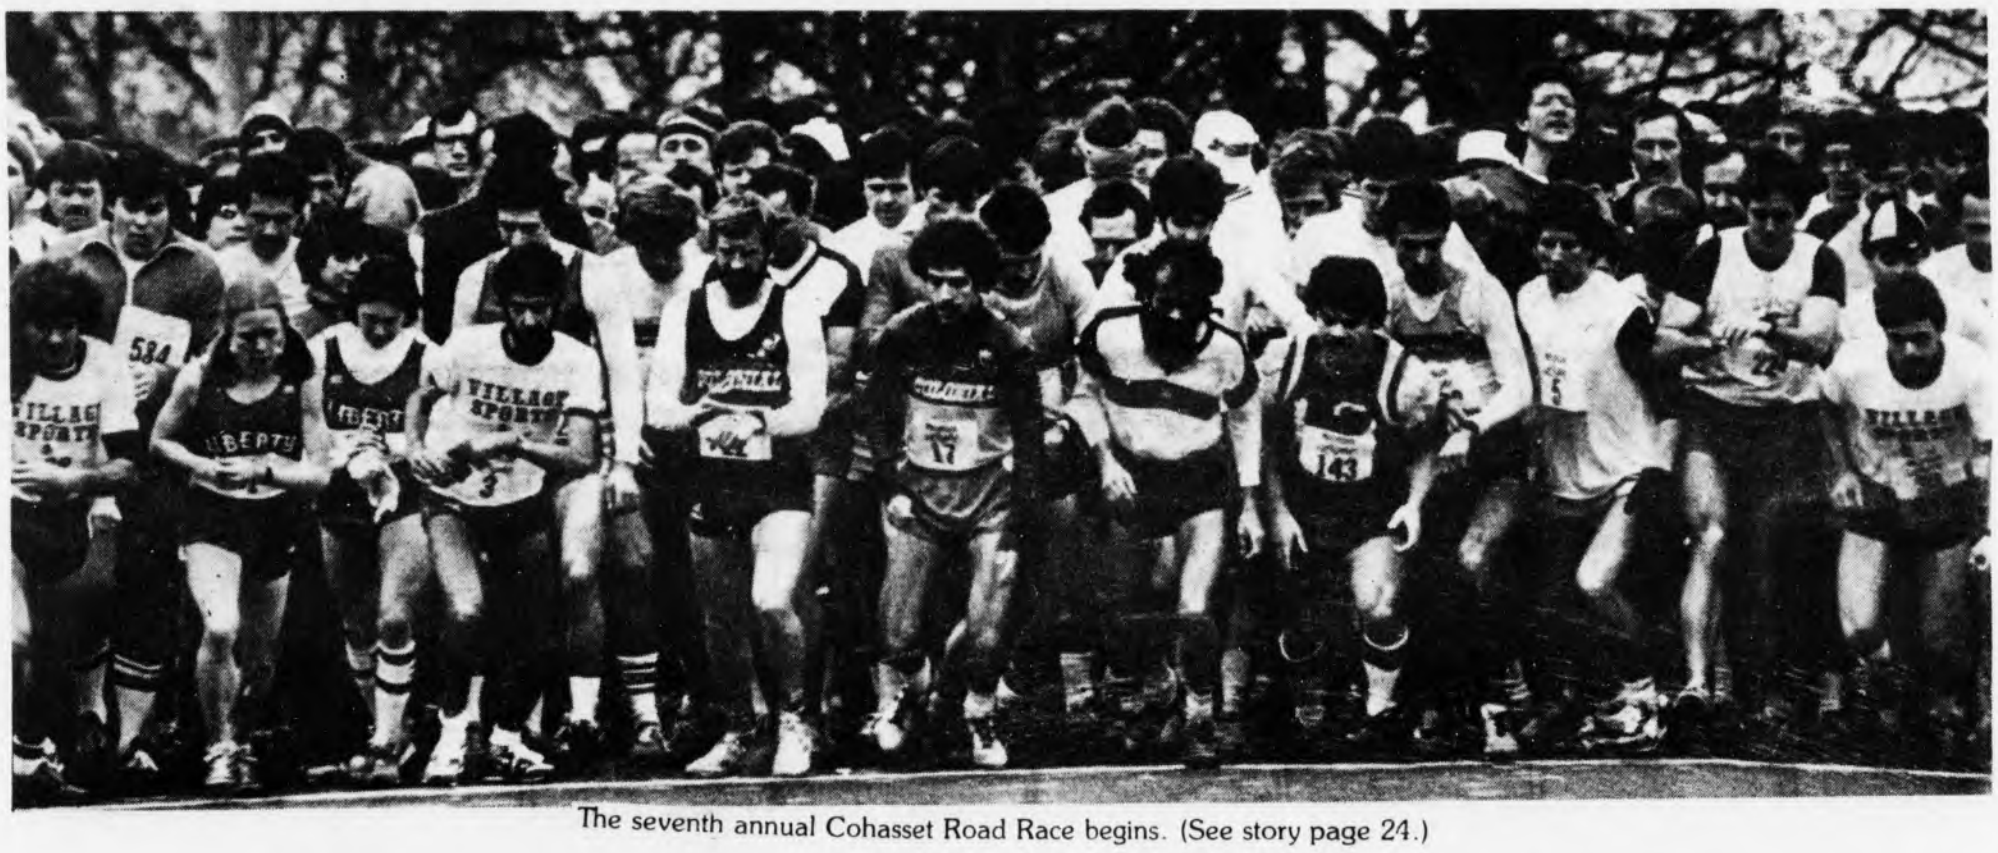
A new safety and emissions inspection is slated to begin Saturday, April 1. All vehicles with a license plate concluding with the numeral 4 must be inspected in April.

The $10, once-a-year fee will be used to test about 32 items in your car. The most important, and newest feature of the inspection, is the emission level test of the carbon monoxide and carbon dioxide from the vehicle's exhaust system.

All cars, 15 years and newer, must be inspected for emission levels. And the only service stations which can perform the complicated procedure are those that have bought the proper equipment and have been approved by the state Registry of Motor Vehicles.

The equipment is quite expensive for the neighborhood garage owner. The Bear exhaust analyzer and engine diagnostic machine costs about $17,000. The Hamilton machine, which can be used for emissions testing only, costs about $8000.

Realistically, local garage owners figure they won't make back the money spent on the machine through inspections alone. They are hoping that if certain cars fail, drivers will detour back into the service station and have their vehicle repaired there.



With maintenance fees, Registry fees, supply costs and insurance, the machines are costing the station owners more than the original purchase price. And on top of all those expenses, the owners must have certified technicians to operate the equipment and read the computer printout.

According to Paul Lucchetti, owner of Lucchetti's Service Center in Marshfield, there will be three men there who will be able to operate the machine. These men were trained and certified by the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, and the state Registry of Motor Vehicles.

The anti-pollution program was instituted after the state was informed it did not meet federal Clean Air Act standards. The new emissions test will determine the carbon monixide and carbon dioxide levels emitted from the exhaust of a vehicle.

If the vehicle does not pass the limitations test, it will not pass inspection. All cars which do not pass inspection have 15 days in which to have the vehicle repaired. Another inspection within 15 days will not cost the consumer an extra fee. After 15 days, there will be another $10 charge for inspection.

Town Meeting arrives Saturday. . . so be prepared

Compassion goes out to the average Cohasset voter at Saturday's annual town meeting.

For weeks and weeks voters have been deluged by the changing events of the sewer issue. Each week brought something new, and each week there was a different perspective.

Besides the sewer issue, there are three other major issues that will spark lively debate.

These are the police civil service question, the school committee budget and the proposal for building a town ramp for the handicapped to town hall.

There may be other issues but these have been the major ones drawing comment during recent weeks.

At Monday night's school committee meeting, board members said there is some talk in the town that selectmen may decide Wednesday night to change the date because many voters may be away Saturday because of the Easter holiday.

However, Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said legal requirements and posting requirements dictate the annual town meeting must be held on its scheduled date of Saturday, April 2, at 1 p.m. at Cohasset High School.

Lanza said it is perfectly permissible for a resident to make a motion Saturday to postpone the town meeting until Monday or another day.

The second major development around town meeting is the proposed move by Ted Guild, sewer commission candidate, to move for early consideration of the two sewer articles, Article 35 and 36.

Guild said the sewer issue is too important to be decided by a handful of voters late Monday or Tuesday night.

He said historically the heaviest attendance at town meeting has been on the first day.

SEWER ISSUE

The Mariner recommends readers pay attention to the Editorial pages for views written by sewer commissioners Charles DeSantis and Max Pounder. Pounder, since he authorized the two articles, was invited to clarify his stance on the two articles.

Special Attorney R. Thomas Bracken has notified selectmen that he agrees with the interpretation of Town Counsel Richard Henderson. Henderson ruled the sewer commissioners are authorized and directed to renegotiate the terms for the Agreement for Judge-

Meet Florence Stanford. . .She's lucky

Ever dream of winning the Lottery?

How about Lottery, Bingo, and Megabucks all in one weekend? Impossible, you say? Well, talk to Florence Stanford of Jerusalem Road about it.

Florence hit it big at bingo the other night when her number was drawn for the door prize.

"My sister told me to take the ticket number and play it in Megabucks, so I did."

And while Florence was at the store, she played her phone number in the lottery, "just for the fun of it. I hadn't played it in quite a while."

She threw the tickets in her pocketbook and forgot about them.

Whoever wins these things anyway?

That night her husband, Joe, was watching TV when he heard that the lottery number was their phone number.

"Too bad you didn't play it," he said. (He had recently teased her out of playing the lottery.) Florence started crying.

"When he realized I was crying because I had played the number, he jumped almost to the ceiling," she laughed.

With all of the excitement, Florence didn't even realize she had hit a partial win on megabucks until the next day.

How to spend the money?

Florence is still in the dreaming stage.

"I'm going to buy all my kids something (she has 10 of them) and maybe get my husband away from work for a weekend. And there are a lot of holes to fill, too."

Is Florence going to retire a champion? "Well, I'm playing my birthdate now," she said. The way things are going, it won't be too long till it comes up.

Incidentally, Florence's birthday is today, Wednesday, March 30.

Cohasset's week...

Closed caption decoders

American Cablesystems Corp., which recently gained Cohasset's cable TV franchise, is planning to make closed caption decoders available to subscribers in Quincy and Arlington. Its patrons in those communities who have impaired hearing will become the first in New England to enjoy cable with closed caption programming.

Rotary phone book

The twentieth edition of the "Cohasset Rotary Telephone Directory" will go to press April 10. This publication has been the major fundraiser of the Club and is responsible for over $9,000 in scholarship funds last year to five Cohasset High School graduates.

In order to continue its tradition for accuracy and dependability, it would be helpful if those citizens with special requests or who have not been listed correctly in the past, would notify the Club.

Also, residents who have moved or changed their telephone number recently should send the correct information to Telephone Directory, P.O. Box 36, Cohasset, Mass. 02025.

Landfill closed on holidays

The Board of Health reminds townspeople the Cedar Street landfill is closed on holidays. Thus, it will be closed on Easter Sunday, April 3.

Early release day

Thursday, April 7, will be an early release day in the Cohasset Public Schools. There will be no afternoon Kindergarten sessions and other students will be dismissed according to the following schedule: Junior/Senior High School, 12:20 p.m., Deer Hill School — 12:40 and Joseph Osgood School — 1 p.m.

Lunch will be served in all of the schools.

This early release day was authorized by the Cohasset School Committee in order to allow staff members at all schools to take part in curriculum update workshops.

Officials attend conference

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza and Selectman Mary Jane MacArthur attended a legislative conference, sponsored by the Massachusetts Municipal Association recently. They heard reports from James Segal, executive director of MMA; state Secretary of Administration and Finance, Frank Keefe; Amy Anthony, secretary of communities and development; state Rep. Charles Flaherty, House Chairman of Taxation; and state Sen. John Ovler, senate chairman of taxation; Gov. Michael Dukakis; Revenue Department commissioner Ira Jackson and Congressman Barney Frank.

Drowning autopsy

Police believe the death of Susan Cairns, whose body was found on Black Rock Beach last week, was by asphyxiation by drowning. They also feel her death is a suicide. Superficial cuts were found on her wrists. A full autopsy report will be completed in two weeks.

Cairns, 28, of Jamaica Plain, worked as a part-time switchboard operator at WGBH — Channel 2, Boston. Her body was discovered early Tuesday morning, March 15 by a newspaper delivery man. Her car, a 1980 Datsun, was found parked on Summit Aven, Hull, near Cohasset's Forest Avenue.

Jacuzzi, Hot Tub regulations

If a Jacuzzi or a hot tub is capable of housing two or more people, building inspector Bob Dennis will refer it to the board of health prior to the issuance of the building alteration permit. Health agent Elaine Eliopoulous said those tubs or Jacuzzis which fit five or six people may create a burden on the home's septic system and cause a flood.

Any future public Jacuzzis must be inspected annually to ensure bacteria count is within safe levels. Residents with homes connected to the town sewer system must have permission from the sewer commission before installing a Jacuzzi.

Meet board of selectman, Michael Rolandelli, presiding at Deer Hill "mock" town meeting.

COHASSET SAVINGS
CAN SAVE YOU $500*
BY APRIL 15
and
MAKE YOU $150 MORE
BY DECEMBER 31

*There's no gimmick. Just open an INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNT with $2,000 and you can take that amount right off your earned income for 1982 to be reported on your Federal Income Tax. We are assuming a single wage earner and a 25% tax bracket. Of course, working couples can deduct up to $4,000, and if you're in a higher bracket, we can save you a lot more!

No tricks here either. We can invest your $2,000 for the rest of the year and add about $150 to it in that short time at present interest rates.

But really, the best is yet to come: Whey you retire, that $2,000 could be $50,000, if you're starting early enough...right now!

So, come in, or give us a call, and let us show you how to save $hundred$ on your taxes while building a neat retirement income.

Not worried over Channel 7 report

Scituate Hill 'spill' studied

Town officials are not alarmed with a television station report that state, federal and local environmental officials are investigating a site behind Norfolk Conveyor Company for possible hazardous waste dumping.

Friday, WNEV-TV (Channel 7) televised a report which showed old rusty barrels which had been buried for some time in the King Street woods.

In addition, the report discussed a fuel oil tank spill and its impact on Lily Pond, the town's main drinking water supply.

The report quoted a federal Environmental Protection Agency official who said tests have been taken to determine the spill's effect on the drinking supply. The official said currently there is no evidence any oil was deposited into the pond.

Elaine Eliopoulous, town health agent, confirmed the Board of Health was conducting tests there. She said more information would be known later in the week.

Fire Chief Martin Dooley said he is satisfied there is no health hazard. He was at Norfolk Conveyor Friday to inspect the company's new painting facilities and fire protection systems. Upon inspection of the outside grounds he found some old barrels.

The contents are still unknown and it is not determined how long the barrels have been there of it an earlier tenant had deposited them there.

Regarding the oil spill, Dooley said it happened four to six weeks ago and it "was of a minor nature. The oil was not highly flammable and tests which were taken by DEQE proved to be negative."

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said he was informed of the situation and said the televised report should not alarm town residents.

This incident is not to be related to the recent selectmen's approval allowing Norfolk Conveyor to store flammable liquids above ground at its King Street plant.

Lacquers, enamel, paint thinners, acetylene and propane gas were stored with a Fire Department permit before. During a recent inspection, Dooley discovered the materials.

Norfolk spokesman William Handrahan told selectmen the company never knew it needed a permit for the above ground storage.

Dooley and Fire Safety Captain Mark Trask are satisfied the materials will be kept in a covered area that has the appropriate fire protection devices requred by law.

The newly constructed building will house the flammable materials and will meet all state and federal requirements.

Handrahan told selectmen about three years ago the firm had a boiler blow, but reported no accidents had occured since then.

Consultants list revaluation schedule

The revaluation schedule by Appraisal Consultants of New England Corp. for the next six weeks is as follows: Doane St., Old Road, King St. from the Scituate Town Line to Rte. 3A, Pond St., Justice Cushing Way from the Scituate Town Line to Sohier St., Buttonwood Lane, Woodland Drive, Driftwood Circle, Briarwood Lane, Bancroft Way, Bancroft Road, Hill St., Oak St., Ash St., Short St., Norfolk Road, James Lane, Hugh Strain Road, Ridgetop Road, Bailey Drive, Bayberry Lane, Tupelo Road, Arrowwood St., Clay Spring Road, Old Pasture Road, Evergreen Lane, Smith Place, Fair Oaks Lane, Cushing Road, Pleasant St. and Home Road.

All persons employed by Appraisal Consultants of New England will have identifications (with photographs) and all vehicle registrations are recorded with the Cohasset Police Department.

Assessors realize that having someone go through your home may impose an inconvenience, but this is necessary to assure complete fairness in the appraisal of your property.

The assessors ask for resident cooperation as each property is examined.

The process should not take more than 20 minutes.

Please keep in mind the person measuring and listing pertinent information is not placing the value on your property.

The final determination of property value will take place only after all the collection data is thoroughly analyzed, at which time residents will be notified of the appraisal value of your property.

New family course approved

The school committee enthusiastically accepted a new course, "Marriage and Family Living," from Mike Gill, health education director, and Dick Streeter, high school principal at a recent meeting.

Next year this course will be offered to seniors on a daily half-year basis.

The course's topics will include growth and human development, "the life cycle," aging, social issues and the family, personal, consumer and emotional health. If successful, Gill said the course will be designed for the lower grades.

Gill will teach the class.

Nancy Clapp of the health advisory committee said the course was approved unanimously by the committee and everyone was enthusiastic about the prospect of the course. Many students had already asked about the class's schedule.

There are three primary methods for combining colors in an interior space. A "monochromatic scheme" utilizes one color in varying degrees of lightness, darkness and brightness. For instance, you may select differing brightnesses of the color blue for walls, furniture, and floor. The effect is restful. A "related scheme" involves the selection of colors that have a common denomination such as yellow and yellow-orange. A related scheme brings a refreshing feeling to a decorated space. Finally, a "complimentary scheme" introduces opposite colors. Introducing blue and red, for example, creates a lively feeling due to the contrast. Allow one color to dominate, leaving small areas or sharp contrast.

Combining colors can be very effective, but it's best you speak with a professional before you start. As the people you can talk to, BOUND BROOK PAINT & HARDWARE welcomes all your questions and we pride ourselves on being able to accommodate you regardless of your budget. Gjesteby refuses to endorse amended school budget

By Jane Lane

Town meeting will be faced with conflicting figures regarding next year's school budget.

The school committee voted Monday night to present an amended budget of $3,843,159 to town meeting. The advisory board has recommended a total of $3,790,161 for schools.

The town warrant will contain a budget figure of $3,873,159. But that figure was pared by $30,000 last week by the school committee.

Although it was the intention of school committee member Joseph Nedrow to present a united front to town meeting and have unanimous approval of the recommended budget, committee member Martha Gjesteby refused to endorse the committee's amended budget.

Despite some last minute efforts to convince Gjesteby to support the committee's recommendation, she remained opposed.

Saying the advisory board's recommended school budget would not cut into school programs, Gjesteby would not side with the remaining four committee members.

Gjesteby said in the event the school department finds it is running out of money next fall, a transfer could be requested from the advisory board at that time.

"I don't believe the advisory board would leave us in the hold," she said.

Nedrow disagreed with her, and said cuts detrimental to the quality of the educational system have been made.

Last week, the committee decided to cut about $30,000 from the budget with the elimination of $4,000 from unemployment costs, $6,000 from the athletic revolving account and $20,000 in additional reductions. The committee's proposed budget remains larger than the advisory board's recommended total by $521,998.

Committee member Richard Conley requested that a letter be sent to selectmen relating the school committee's support of an amended school budget. The letter will request selectmen's endorsement of the revised amount.

Conley added that he made a counter offer to the advisory committee last week. He recommended that $35,000 be cut from the school's water bill, groundskeeper costs, and unemployment insurance. These Chapter 70 costs would still be charged to the school department on paper, and would be reimbursed to some extent by the state, he said.

Conley also noted that many people he has recently talked with have expressed their support of the school committee's proposed budget.

Nedrow suggested that a strategy workshop be held Friday at 9:30 a.m. at the high school.

At that time, the school committee members and Supt. Eugene Crowell will discuss how they will present their proposed budget to town meeting. The meeting will be held in open session.

Nedrow recommended that certain school committee members be responsible for alerting various constituencies to attend town meeting. The real estate and contracting business and booster clubs members and parents should be urged to attend town meeting in support of the committee's recommended budget "to maintain quality education in Cohasset," Nedrow said.

He added that in addition to the ocean, Cohasset has remained an attractive community because of its tradition of quality education. Any further budget cuts would damage that reputation, he said.

Committee Chairman Diana Kornet agreed that town meeting voters must be informed about the issues confronting the schools in fiscal 1984. During the budget strategy meeting Friday, the committee will discuss several items which they intend to present to town meeting during the school budget presentation.

The committee will review comparative per pupil costs in Cohasset and other communities, a historical review of the various academic records and achievements of Cohasset schools, and a summary of the educational programs and services that have been cut from the system since Prop. 2½.

Kornet said the committee is not intending to "stonewall" town meeting voters. But the members will be making an effort to better inform voters on the school budget isssue, she said.

Murray opposes gambling

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray addressed members of the Government Regulations Committee March 23 on the issue of casino gambling.

"Nothing I have seen or heard has changed my position of being unalterably opposed to casino gambling anywhere in this Commonwealth," said Murray.

She reiterated her negative position on the issue of gambling by recounting the disastrous effects on Atlantic City, New Jersey.

"Casino gambling has no place in Massachusetts," Murray concluded. "The problems that inevitably accompany it can be devastating. (It) breeds an extremely unhealthy environment."

Selectmen may have to decide whom to bury

By Mike Berger

Who says selectmen only vote on dull issues?

Among their many duties, they may now be called upon to decide who to bury in undesignated cemetery lots (those not designated in a will).

Selectmen have been executing this new duty on behalf of an unnamed decendent who bought 19 lots in Woodside Cemetery for himself and his family in 1951.

"Mr. X" left a will before he died, but did not designate what happens to the cemetery lots.

State law does have a provision for cemetery lot deeds which enables selectmen to act as cemetery commissioners when lot designations are not set in the deeds.

Selectmen last week reluctantly decided who among the remaining heirs will be in charge of representing the cemetery lots.

Once the will is read, the remaining heirs have one year to decide and to contact the town treasurer. If the designation hasn't been decided, it's up to the selectmen.

The heirs can later disagree with the decision and may have the ultimate authority to rescind the selectmen's decision.

However, "Mr. X's" family is feuding and no agreement was reached.

When Executive Secretary Mark Lanza heard of the pending issue, he immediately called Town Counsel Richard Henderson to establish a policy.

Selectmen approved the policy but said the critieria should be flexible.

In "Mr. X's" case, selectmen chose as representative, the brother of the deceased, who is the oldest brother of the family, the wife of the brother and an alleged sister who is living somewhere on the west coast. In addition, children, wives and trustees of the descendants were eligible to be the representative.

The oldest brother was chosen by Selectman Chairman Henry Ainslie, and Selectmen Rocco Laugelle and Mary Jane McArthur.

Cohasset now has a policy for determining the representatives of unrepresented cemetery lots.

Here is a copy of the proposed policy:

In the event that the owner of a Cemetery lot dies intestate or if the decedents will does not provide for disposition of the lot to his/her heirs, the decedent's heirs shall be asked to designate to the Town Treasurer which of their number shall represent the lot.

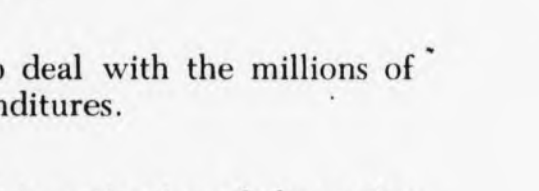
If the heirs fail to designate one of their number to represent the lot within one year of the decedents death, the Board of Selectmen shall cause to be entered for the record which of his/her heirs or devisees shall represent the lot(s) while the heirs failure to designate continues.

In deciding which of the decedent's heirs or devisees shall represent the lot(s), the Board of Selectmen shall consider the following criteria in the following order of importance:

1) Which of the heirs is the oldest

2) Which of the heirs lived in the community the longest

3) Which of the heirs maintained the closest relationship with the decedent during his life.



Services at 2nd Congregational Church

Thursday, March 31, a service of Communion and reception of new members will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Second Congregational Church sanctuary. A special feature of the service will be "A Feast of Remembrance," a choral and spoken setting of Holy Communion. Fifteen new adult members will be received.

The sanctuary will be open for prayer and meditation Good Friday, April 1, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. At 3 p.m., the traditional hour of the death of Jesus, the church bell will be tolled.

The Easter sunrise service will be held at 7:30 a.m., April 3 at Sandy Beach. Members of the community are invited to attend. The service will be held in Bates Hall at the church only if it is raining or snowing.

The Easter Sunday Service at 10 a.m. will include special music by the choir and soloists, led by Ellen Fryling, and the Easter message, "Last Supper and First Breakfast," by Rev. John Benbow. Child care will be available.

EDWARD M. "TED" GUILD

SEWER COMMISSIONER

(The One Year Term)

GUILD has proven ability and experience to deal with the millions of dollars now under consideration for sewer expenditures.

GUILD will insist on a complete and thorough investigation of alternative and less costly methods for waste water treatment as mandated under Article 4, by the voters at the November 29, 1982 Town Meeting. He will insist that this be done before ANY further funds are expended or any other sewering commitments are entered into. For this reason, he urges you to vote NO on Article 36 at this Saturday's Town Meeting. Article 36 will cost you, the taxpayers, $560,000 just for the preparation of the Metcalf & Eddy plans and specifications. For less than $560,000, GUILD believes that Cohasset can solve its sewer problems completely as fully explained in the separate blue insert in today's paper.

GUILD is committed to preserving the quality of life in Cohasset and full maintenance of essential town services and quality education.

around town

☐One subject around town that isn't controversial is cable T.V. Most cannot wait for its arrival, and say it's too bad it can't be available sooner so we don't have to go through another season of re-runs.

☐Mimi Hunt of Naples, Florida, wrote to the Mariner to let us let you know "Where in the World she is."

Mimi enjoys reading Around Town, editorials and the police report, in that order, in her weekly paper.

She misses her family, old friends, the Red Lion Inn and the view at Sandy Beach most.

Cohasset misses Mimi. Thanks for writing.

☐An extremely happy new daddy called last week to be sure the town knows about his latest addition. Paul Krupczak and his wife, Debra, announce with joy the birth of their son, Brian Joseph, born at South Shore Hospital. Brian weighed in at 7 pounds, 8 ounces. Aaron River Road residents, watch for Mom and Dad taking a stroll with Brian.

☐Joe Laugelle wanted everyone to know that he and his wife Rosemary had a fine time in Florida, and wondered why it hadn't been in the paper that they were away...everyone knows your whereabouts at all times, Skinny, don't you know that?

Fifth graders learn about annual town meeting from League of Women Voters representatives, Sue McNamara and Robin Suhrbier. "Town Hall" is Mrs. MacDonald's classroom at Deer Hill. (Greg Derr photo)

☐Erin O'Brien, a student at Springfield College, was appointed the assistant track coach at West Springfield High School. A great track star herself, Erin is sure to help make their season a winning one. Erin's Dad, Bill, received a package that is meant for runners that perhaps he can share with her...along with a set of instructions. Bill has a box of people crackers (includes policeman, fireman, mailman and paper boys) that you throw at dogs that are chasing you while running.

☐Last month was certainly the month to own a card shop in Cohasset. Vi Tuthill reports that she received 500 cards during her recent illness; Bob Pape got 200. They wish to thank everyone for their kindness and thoughts.

☐The Rotary Club is pleased with the amount of runners in the road race. Eight hundred and twenty registered with 200 unregistered runners — that's a lot of people. The money raised goes towards their scholarship fund, so everyone benefits. All of their time and efforts were worth it. Runners were a happy group too...they were fed by the Rotarians at the end of the race, all 1,000 of them...

☐Peter and Judy Kulturides have joined the ranks of the "I shopped smoking" group, and are doing a good job. Judy doesn't even give lectures to those that still smoke.

COHASSET CHOSE JOHN DE BASSIO

John DeBassio didn't come to Cohasset the typical way, by being born here, or by happening to find a home here. He was chosen...

In 1980, a six-member police chief search committee comprised of some of Cohasset's finest community leaders and successful businessmen chose John DeBassio as one of three individuals, of over 100 candidates, to be interviewed by selectmen. It was an important search, for John DeBassio, if selected would lead one of the most sensitive departments in Cohasset.

The search committee chose John DeBassio for many reasons: his leadership ability; his personal initiative in having gained an education in both criminal justice and public administration; his experience in the instruction of men and women in criminal justice programs at the college and university levels; and his personal stability and integrity.

When John DeBassio was offered the job of police chief in the fall of 1980, Cohasset knew more about John DeBassio than John Debassio would ever know about any of us, individually. He had been personally interviewed and reinterviewed by the search committee and the selectmen on many occasions. A background search was done regarding both his professional and private life. Various other firm guidelines were met, with excellence.

Howard Wallace Pratt

Howard Wallace Pratt, 86, of Cohasset, a retired, self-employed distributor of industrial tools, died March 21 in the Blair House in Worcester after a long illness.

Born in Cohasset, he was in the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Brockton several years before moving to Blair House a year ago. He was an Army veteran of World War I.

He leaves a daughter, Deborah C. Smith of North Weymouth; two sisters, Helen Whittemore and Sarah Bates, both of Scituate; and a grandson, Robert Smith of North Weymouth.

A private graveside service will be held Friday in Beechwood Cemetery.

Visiting hours and flowers are omitted.

Jazz, concert bands trip approved

The school committee granted approval of the jazz and concert bands to attend the Heritage Musical Festival in Newport, R.I., May 13 and 14.

The 50 students who are planning to attend the weekend event will pay $50 each for transportation and motel accommodations. There will be five adult chaperones on the trip, Supt. Crowell said.

The high school entered this contest twice before and won first place both years, he said. There has never been a report that any student was denied attendance on the trip because of a lack of funds.

The committee granted permission for the trip. The members requested that Supt. Eugene Crowell find out if there are available funds in the music department field trip account to subsidize some of the costs for this excursion.

Editorial

See You Saturday

Annual Town Meeting occurs on Saturday, or should we say it begins on Saturday, with probable continuations to follow. Contained within the 36 articles that will be acted upon are both routine annual business and several articles representing decisions that will affect both the town and your pocketbook for years to come. Your presence at Cohasset High School auditorium is therefore imperative notwithstanding the fact that it's the day before Easter and that the weatherman is already making noises about snow.

Here are our thoughts on five of the 36 articles. Four we comment on are highly charged issues and one (#30, handicapped access to Town Hall) affects perhaps ten citizens — but profoundly.

Articles 27 and 28 concern the police department. Article 27 would create what its proponents believe would be a "strong chief," independent of "political interference" by the board of selectmen.

We are opposed to Article 27. We believe that if there is the risk of inappropriate interference in the police department by selectmen, there is also the risk of a chief given too much license acting inappropriately. The fact is selectmen and only selectmen are answerable to the "boss," the people. Selectmen, therefore, must have both the ultimate responsibility for the department — indeed for all town departments.

For essentially the same reason we also oppose Article 28, which would return the position of chief of police to the civil service system. A chief not in civil service is more accountable to the duly elected selectmen who have appointed him.

Article 30 would appropriate $5,000 to construct a ramp giving the handicapped access to the first floor of Town Hall. We favor the idea — even though access to the first floor would be a limited achievement given the amount of business that transpires on the second floor.

But we oppose Article 30 because we believe the desired ramp can be built at less cost to the town than the requested $5,000. We note that the Carmone Corporation of Sharon, which has built many such ramps, has generously offered to donate its tools and labor for building a ramp if the town will supply the materials. Surely materials can be obtained for less than $5,000.

Articles 35 and 36 concern sewerage. You're probably tired of reading about sewage and sewerage, as surely we are tired of writing about same. But the question must not be dismissed out of weariness, for huge sums of money are involved.

To be as brief as possible, we oppose both Articles 35 and 36 because they would have the effect of negating last November's Special Town Meeting vote to explore less expensive alternatives to the highly expensive Metcalf and Eddy plan. It is imperative to conduct the search that has been authorized, and while the search is being undertaken, the Metcalf and Eddy plan should not be funded or implemented.

Democracy in action isn't always stirring. Annual Town Meeting can be a nuisance. But it is part of what distinguishes this republic from the varying forms of tyranny elsewhere in the world. So although like you there might be things we'd rather be doing the first Saturday in April, we'll be there, and so, we hope, will you.

'Leave it to the Dragon'

By Claire McDonough

Breida nudged Skipper as I entered the room.

"Has she been crying again?"

I held a crumpled Kleenex to my eyes.

"Our little boy is all grown up," I sniffed.

Skipper smiled modestly. "You wanna feel my biceps?"

"Not you," I snapped. "You still have a long way to go. I'm talking about Beaver Cleaver."

Breida looked at me in polite disbelief. "You're crying over 'Leave it to Beaver'?"

"Not just him. Do you realize Ward is dead, and we never even knew he was sick?

"And poor June. Still in the kitchen baking cookies after all these years. And wouldn't you think by now she'd be able to stop worrying about the Beaver? By the time your child is married and has two boys of his own, he certainly should be able to cope without his mother. But you never stop thinking of him as your baby. When his marriage starts breaking up it gets you," I clutched myself dramatically, "right through the heart."

Skipper looked at me critically. "I think it got you in the gall bladder."

"Go ahead and laugh," I said, "but how can June have any confidence in Beaver if he didn't have better judgment than to marry a woman who would leave him and her children and go to Italy to become a veterinarian..."

"He should have been suspicious," Breida agreed, "when she was willing to marry a grown man named Beaver that her interests might lie more in the area of animal husbandry."

I started sobbing in earnest. You people just don't realize the seriousness of the situation. Just think of those two little boys. They don't know why their parents split up. They think they're unwanted. They even ran away from home. Ward and June always provided a stable life for their boys. How can June be content baking cookies when she knows her grandchildren are unhappy?"

The Dragon got out of his chair and put his arm around my shoulder.

"Don't cry, Honey. Things aren't all bleak. After all, Wally is a successful lawyer and his marriage is stable. He grew up in the same environment that Beaver did, so June doesn't have to blame herself. And now that Wally's wife finally got pregnant, June will be able to look forward to a new grandchild who won't be confused or unhappy."

"Do you really think so?" I asked doubtfully.

"Sure. And it isn't all that bad with Beaver, either. After all, he was able to explain to the boys that he really wants them and that the breakup wasn't their fault. His marriage may even be saved. Considering her track record, his wife may flunk out of the Italian veterinary school. If she does, where will she turn but to her family?

"And some things never change. Certainly June must have taken some comfort when she saw that Wally's friend was the same old slimy Eddie Haskell, and Beaver was working for Lumpy's father."

"You're right," I smiled. "Also, when June moves to a condo she probably won't spend as much time baking cookies."

"Didn't I tell you?" the Dragon grinned. "There are still happy endings."

Leave it to the Dragon.

Report from the state house

By State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray

CAUCUS PRIORITIES

In celebration of International Women's Day and Women's History week, members of the Women's egislative Caucus announced their 1983 legislative agenda. I as Caucus Chairwoman, feel it is fitting that we present our priorities, which can best be described as issue of economic concern to women, on such a significant day. Observance of March 8th as International Women's Day was initiated by women involved in labor struggles. Women have worked for the improvement of economic conditions for centuries and continue towards that today.

Fifty-two percent of American women are in the labor force. Women, an increasing number of whom are single parents, struggle to support themselves and their families. We still earn 59 cents to $1 men earn. Women's earnings, unlike men's do not rise with age and experience.

Cognizant of this, the Women's Legislative Caucus has included passage of H. 2421 among its 1983 agenda items. H. 2421 promotes the investigation of the degree of pay inequity in the Massachusetts State Employment System.

Another area of significant economic import to women is H. 4958, which prohibits discrimination against women with respect to insurance. Caucus members maintain that the actuarial tables used by the insurance industry are not a valid basis for current practice. Group statistics discriminate against individuals. It is unjust that women are forced to pay $15,732 more than men during a lifetime for the same health and life insurance policies.

Displaced homemaker legislation, H. 2660, continues to occupy a prominent place on the caucus agenda. This is a wonderful program that works. It provides women, who have lost the income on which they have lived (due to divorce, separation, death), the opportunity to become self-supporting, not welfare dependent.

Rape and violence against women, always a major caucus concern, are included in the 1983 agenda in the form of protecting victims. One out of every four women in America will be raped in her lifetime. FBI statistics show that rape is the fastest growing and least reported violent crime. We, of the Womens Legislative Caucus, are committed to protecting rape victims.

We will work for passage of S. 1027 and H. 4237 which are designed to safeguard the privacy of sexual assault victims in the courtroom.

REPUBLICAN LEGISLATIVE PACKAGE

Traditionally, Republican members of the Mass. House of Representatives file a comprehensive package designed to address current problems and to improve the state's laws in various areas.

The package for the 1983 session includes more than 65 bills reflecting concerns of Mass. consumers, businesses, its judicial system, taxation process and more.

Among the bills filed are:

Lemon Law (New Vehicles) — to improve existing law regarding sales of new vehicles. Will require automobile dealers to repair or replace vehicles with substantial defects. The bill describes the options a buyer of a defective automobile has and what obligations fall to the dealer.

Business bills — Enterprise Zones: tax incentives to induce established businesses to expand into areas of substantial poverty and establishes incentives to hire poverty area residents.

Loss carry forward — allows business to carry losses into the five ensuing taxable years.

Education fund accounts — exempts from state income tax up to $3,000 per year when contributed by the taxpayer into an education fund account for a named student. Account is paid out by bank to accredited college or training school on the basis of invoices usually billed by the school. Any money left in an account when terminated is paid to the original depositor and then becomes taxable.

Crime victims' bill of rights — a series of five bills dealing with victim input to the bail process, pleas bargaining, sentencing, parole and restitution.

Insanity defense — a series of eight bills creating a "guilty but insane" plea, including shifting the burden from prosecutor to defendent to prove insanity beyond a reasonable doubt; lengthening commitment period for the criminally insane; establishing a medium security facility for insane women; sending a notice to appropriate parties upon release of the criminally insane defendant, and providing for a "probation period" after release for criminally insane defendant to be periodically examined by the attending physician.

State finance bills — four percent spending cap limits state spending to increase of four percent above prior fiscal year spending. Escape built in for emergency. (Constitutional amendment.)

The sewer issue

To the Editor:

We are being pressured to begin the first phase of a $16,000,000 to $30,000,000 construction project to sewer portions of the town and build a new wastewater treatment plant.

The existing system serves 650 people in approximately 220 homes. The people account for 48,000 gallons per day, sewerage. The existing wastewater treatment plant can and does handle 75,000 gallons per day. The difference in flow by people served and existing plant use is the high school and businesses and leaky pipes, which allow ground water to enter the sewerage.

Everyone seems to agree that something must be done to serve the people in the Hillside and Veterans areas. A count of those houses is approximately 250. This equates to 56,000 gallons of wastewater per day.

The total wastewater requirement of the exising sewered area plus Hillside, Veterans and Gosgood and Deer Hill Schools is 150,000 gallons per day. Why are we building a one million gallon per day plant?

Per a recent proposed sewer commission letter to Town Counsel, the initial capital costs of the new wastewater treatment plant and related sewering will be $13,000,000. If you divide $13,000,000 by the additioal 250 houses to be sewered, the cost per house is $12,000. Hook-up costs will be at least $2,000 per house and debt service and operating and maintenaance will be $300,000 per year.

The total combined costs over 20 years to sewer 250 homes in the Hillside and Veterans areas total $20,000,000. This equals $80,000 per house. If only every third house in these areas has a septage problem, the central sewer plan costs $240,000 per house.

While the state and federal governments will pay $10,000,000 of the initial $13,000,000, we are the government. It is all our tax money.

Road race success

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Rotary Club of Cohasset, I would like to take this opportunity to express our gratitude to the residents of Cohasset for their support and assistance in making the Road-Race of March 27 the most successful yet. It is an event, as citizens, we can all take price in.

Special thanks must be given to the selectmen, the highway department, the part department, the police and fire departments — without their endless guidance and cooperation the starting gun could never be fired.

The presence of the Mariner and the fantastic performance of the Cohasset High School Jazz Ensemble gave heightened interest and festivity to the event.

I would be remiss in not giving special thanks to Sharpless Jones, Clark Chatterton, Jan Ditmar and John Kinchla as well as all the Rotarians involved, especially Don Harrold, John Muncy, John DeBassio, John Sadler, Fred Johansen and Arne Gjesteby.

My warmest gratitude to Roy Fitzsimmons for the tradition he established, and continues with endless devotion.

Peter J. Logan
President,

McKinnon opposes casinos

State Senator Allan McKinnon presented testimony against any legislation to legalize casino gambling in the Commonwealth at a Committee on Government Regulations hearing March 23.

McKinnon expressed his "vehement" opposition to Senate bill 518 and all other bills to legalize casino gambling.

"Both objective research and the experience of Atlantic City and Las Vegas indicate that the social and governmental impact of casino gambling on Massachusetts would be devastating," McKinnon said. "It is clear that the negative effects on our quality of life would far outweigh any possible benefits resulting from the legalization of casino gambling.

"The legalization of casino gambling would," McKinnon said, "result in irreparable damage to the quality of life in Massachusetts. Casinos strain local and regional public services to the breaking point."

McKinnon urged the chairman and members of the committee not to pass legislative proposals on casino gambling.

The Mariner Survey results...

Should the Mariner survey voters prevail at annual town meeting, Cohasset will stick with the DeSantis alternative sewer approach (30 to 7) and reject a move to rescinding a November 1982 vote to revert to the Metcalf and Eddy sewer plan (29 to 7).

For a hectic pre-election/annual town meeting time, the survey responses totaled a respectable 39.

On the question of whether the school committee should be allowd to exceed the advisory board's spending guidelines, 37 said no and two said yes. It was the only question out of 15 with no "no opinion" responses.

On the "police chief" questions, 22 said the chief should not be returned to Civil Service, 13, no, and four, no opinion; 20 said he should remain under the jurisdiction of selectmen, 17 said no and two had no opinion; and respondents do not want him to be a "strong" chief by a small margin, 19 to 17 with three no opinions. Twenty-four feel there should be a special citizen's task force to screen police chief candidates, 10 said no, and four had no opinion.

On the issue of Civil Service, one survey said, "It was a very sad day when the Civil Service was taken away from the chief. The Police Force should be run with no political intervention. This can lead to many bad incidents, which possibly the townspeople, on the whole, would never hear of. If they want the job, let them put on a uniform."

The vote on 24-hour patrols in the Village was also close, 19 said no, 13 said yes, and five, no opinion. Three surveys suggested the patrols should be extended to Friday and Saturday nights, another said there should be 18-hour shifts and one said the matter should be discussed between the chief, merchants and selectmen.

Survey voters are decidedly against the establishment of an adult entertainment zone by a vote of 32 to 6. One wrote, "If the Town of Cohasset does not have protection in their zoning by-laws, then how can we prevent what is happening in Stoughton from occuring here?"

They were more decided on the issue of recreational use of a new harbor expansion, 32 for and four against, than they were on the completion of the harbor expansion project itself, 15 voted yes, 19 no, and five had no opinion.

They were divided over whether the school department should be charged in its budget for water and sewer costs; 18 said yes, 13, no, and eight had no opinion. One respondent noted that "45 percent is reimbursed by state."

Complete survey results follow.

1. Should the town rescind its November special town meeting vote and revert to the Metcalf and Eddy sewer plan?
7 Yes 29 No 3 No Opinion.

2. Should the town continue with the Charles DeSantis sponsored article and seek other alternatives to the town's sewer problems?
30 Yes 7 No 2 No Opinion.

3. Should the position of police chief be returned to Civil Service?
13 Yes 22 No 4 No Opinion.

4. Should the position of police chief continue to be solely under the jurisdiction of selectmen?
20 Yes 17 No 2 No Opinion.

5. Should a special citizen's task force be re-established to screen police chief candidates?
24 Yes 10 No 4 No Opinion.

6. Should the town allow the police chief to be a "strong chief," free from interference from the selectmen and not under Civil Service?
17 Yes 19 No 3 No Opinion.

7. Should the school committee be allowed to exceed the advisory board's spending guidelines?
2 Yes 37 No 2 No Opinion.

8. Should the town landfill be run by a private contractor?
12 Yes 20 No 7 No Opinion.

9. Should police officers be hired to patrol Cohasset Village on a 24-hour basis?
13 Yes 19 No 5 No Opinion.

10. Should the planning board establish an adult entertainment zone before a business firm applies?
6 Yes 32 No 1 No Opinion.

11. Should the town go forward with the harbor expansion project?
15 Yes 19 No 5 No Opinion.

12. If the town does expand the harbor, should recreational boaters be allowed to use the new pier?
32 Yes 4 No 3 No Opinion.

13. Should the school department be charged for water and sewer costs with the costs included in the school budget?
18 Yes 13 No 8 No Opinion.

14. Should the town prohibit a special town meeting from voting changes in the structure of town government?
13 Yes 22 No 4 No Opinion.

15. Should guests of residents be charged a beach and landfill sticker?
14 Yes 18 No 5 No Opinion.

Around town hall . . .

TOWN REPORTS

Town Reports will be available at Town Hall to be picked up after Wednesday, March 30. Warrants were mailed Friday, March 25.

SEWER ADVISORY BOARD DISBANDED

Selectmen disbanded the sewer advisory committee because they felt it is no longer needed. Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said the sewer commissioners will be the board in charge of making decisions aout the direction the town will take. Selectman Rocco Laugelle said the committee whould be commended for "a job well done." The advisory committee helped choose an engineering firm to explore alternative sewer approaches to the Metcalf and Eddy plan.

NEW CONSERVATION COMM. APPOINTMENT

Walter Wullivan of Pond Street was unanimously appointed to the Conservation Commission to replace Robert Maki who resigned recently. Commission Chairman John Hubbard said Sullivan was recommended for his engineering background. "When Maki resigned, we lost an engineer which we felt is very important to the commission," Hubbard said. The board also interviewed Willoughby Hood and Linda Wakeman for the vacancy.

PERMANENT POLICE SGT.

Robert Jackson will be appointed permanent police sergeant when a Civil Serivce list arrives in Cohasset. Jackson was the only officer to pass the sergeant's exam.

HARBORMASTER SUPPORT

Salectmen Henry Ainslie, Mary Jane McArthur and Rocco Laugelle expressed their stron support for Harbormaster Harry Ritter to enforce the harbor bylaws. Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said Ritter perceived he didn't have 100 percent support from the selectmen. Ainslie said Ritter should perform his job duties as he perceives them.

DEPT. SURPLUS

Town Accountant Bill Signorelli released a list of major department surplus given back to the town as of June 30, 1982. The list includes executive secretary, salary and expenses, $6,006; selectmen salary, $1,008; expenses, $1,602; assessors, $2,661; police (S&L), $12,231; expenses, $7,143; fire dept. (S&L), $3,462; expenses, $7,034; wire dept. (S&L), $3,064; tree and park dept. (S&L), $5,051; landfill (S&L), $1,255; expenses, $3,450; sewer dept. (S&L), $3,936; highway (S&L), $6,251; school dept, $271; library (S&W), $1,569; recreation (S&L), $355; and cemetery (S&W), $1,004.

All of the town departments, excluding water, contributed $119,559 which began the town's available cash figure for the 1982-83 fiscal year. Signorelli siad not mailing out town reports saved the town $3,700.

POSSIBLE TOWN RAMP SAVINGS

Theodore Carmone, president of Carmone Corp. has written to Solace Tobey of the "Patriot Ledger" to inform her of the company's past experience on building and designing ramps. The company would like to donate tools and labor if Cohasset would pay for the materials. Carmone wrote the materials would only consist of concrete and the company would like to build the ramp conforming to the company's own design.

Computers invade the service station...

There are good and bad points to consider from all angles of this new system.

Many station owners, including Glen Wilder of Wilder Brothers in North Scituate, said the new testing will "help to take the heaps off the road."

"The inspections will actually help the consumer," he said. "By knowing the emissions level of their cars, and what is causing any problems, the consumer will have a safer, better performing car."

Wilder noted that faulty exhaust systems have caused accidental deaths in Scituate and other communities this past year.

Controlled testing during the inspection will help to eliminate faulty exhaust systems, Wilder said.

Wilder Brothers Tire Mart bought the $18,000 Bear machine. It will be used during safety and emissions testing, and also in diagnostic tests, especially in late model cars. Wilder expects to earn back his investment in the machine by utilizing it during diagnostic tune-ups.

Although the state has informed garage owners that only 18 percent of all inspected vehicles are expected to fail the emission test, Wilder does not feel that projection is accurate.

Last Saturday, Wilder Brothers sponsored a trial emissions inspection at no charge. Vehicle owners had to have a coupon which had been published in a local newspaper.

Only 50 persons showed up for the free test, but a lot more than 18 percent failed the emissions test, he said.

Although a large number of the customers failed the trial inspection, Wilder said most cars could easily be repaired.

"Most of the time the problems would be with the spark plugs, or plug wires, or a malfunction with the choke. These things contribute greatly to the failure of a car during emissions inspection," he said.

The machine which checks the emission controls is a computer.

The machine prints the actual emissions level from the car's exhaust pipe on a printout sheet which is given to the consumer. A computer video screen also simultaneously records the levels. The results are recorded onto a tape cassette in the machine, which is later given to the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

Don't blame the technician recording the information if your vehicle fails inspection. According to station owner Lucchetti, the exhaust levels are precalibrated into the machine. There are varying levels programmed for cars such as those made in 1970 to 1974, and for later model cars. For most cars which do not pass the emission test, it will mean a tune up or a minor carburator adjustment.

Mitchell's Repair Shop in Cohasset purchased a Bear analyzer a few weeks ago. Because they do a lot of contract work with large car dealerships in the area, they wanted to keep in the vehicle inspection business, according to Brian Mitchell.

As Mitchell said, "The days of the tire and exhaust shop are gone. Service stations are at the point, you have to either go with the computers, or be left behind."

Although Mitchell's has been performing vehicle inspections for about 20 years, "this computer business is a little scary," he said. He added that his initial tendency was to "jump right into the programming," but once one program had been worked out, the Registry came back and changed its regulations.

Mitchell also noted that the $7.50 per inspection the local stations will receive won't amount to much. Often, a car will fail inspection because its idle is too fast. But the ordinary human can't detect that. It takes a computer to reveal that problem, he said.

Therefore, the station owner will perform the entire emissions testing and about 20 minutes later, will discover the idle exceeds the RPM limit.

So the mechanic will adjust the idle, and spend another half hour testing the car again. The station owner will only receive $7.50 for about one hour's aggravation, Mitchell said.

"It will take a lot of inspections to pay back the $20,000 we've spent on the machine and other inspection equipment," he figured.

Wayne Robbins, owner of Robbins Garage on North Main Street, Cohasset, is thinking about purchasing an emissions analyzer, but not for inspections. Robbins said the $17,000 machine would be used for diagnostic engine tune-ups only.

"There's no way now to test cars to make sure they would pass inspections," he said. "We're being forced into it. A customer will come to a garage like mine to make sure their vehicle will later pass inspection. How can I tell if the car will pass inspection, if I don't have the same emission analyzer?

"The consumer is going to have to pay between $20 and $30 for a diagnostic tune-up. I guess that's the price we have to pay for clean air."

Jim Roderick of Marshfield Motors said that company purchased a Bear analyzer and has already been approved as station 1865 by the Registry as an official inspection center. Because Marshfield Motors also sells pre-owned vehicles, it is necessary to remain in the inspection business, Roderick said.

In fact, he added, the Rte. 139 company is investigating the possibility of inspecting vehicles on Sundays, now that the bulk of the Blue Laws have faded into obscurity.

Three of Roderick's mechanics have attended the computer class in Woburn sponsored by the Registry. He said there will be enough manpower available to handle the inspections seven days a week.

In addition, the analyzer will be utilized for vehicle tune-ups. Roderick likes to describe the Bear as "the electronic brain that tells us why a car is sick."

Marshfield Sunoco hopes to have everything prepared for inspections by Saturday, April 1. Although they applied last week for state approval, the station owner said the Registry has not come to inspect the garage.

There are two certified mechanics prepared to operate the Hamilton analyzer the station purchased a week and a half ago.

"I feel the purchase of the machine is going to be advantageous to our business," the owner said. "I think it will pick up a lot of business for us. A lot of stations used to do inspections, but now they are not. The inspections will sell more work for us in the long run."

There are positive and negative aspects to the new testing. Hopefully, the air will be cleaner without the high level of poisonous emissions from vehicle exhausts. Another positive argument is that safer cars will be driven on our roads and highways.

"The new system will get a lot of the junk off the road. Anything that has a lot of rust on it, and has a faulty exhaust system won't pass inspection," according to Scituate station owner Wilder. "We are not going to jeopardize our station by slapping a sticker on a car that doesn't pass inspection. Rusty cars are going to take a beating with this new system.

"Cars with faulty exhausts are deadly," he continued. "It would be just plain immoral to put a sticker on a car that eventually might kill someone."

Area computer stations

The new motor vehicle inspection system, including emission control testing, will begin April 1. The once-a-year safety and emissions test will cost $10.

For vehicles 15 years and older, a safety inspection is all that is required, at a cost of $4 per year.

The last numeral on a vehicle's license plate determines the month the car or truck is to be inspected. All vehicles bearing a license plate ending with the number 4 must be inspected in April.

The following area stations have applied to the state for approval as motor vehicle inspection station centers.

Marshfield: Marshfield Motors on Ocean Street, Rte. 139; Lucchetti's Service Center on Plain Street, Rte. 139; and Marshfield Sunoco on Ocean Street, Rte. 139.

Scituate: Wilder Brothers on Country Way in North Scituate.

Cohasset: Mitchell's Repair Shop on Rte. 3A.

If the last numeral on your license plate is 0, the vehicle must be inspected in October. Vanity plates with all letters, no numerals, must be inspected in November.

For cars with vanity plates containing letters and numerals, use the month assigned to the last numeral on the plate.

All government and municipal vehicles will be inspected in December. Antique cars will be inspected in June.

PSO Night draws three candidates

By Moira McCarthy

All three school committee candidates stressed their personal experiences will be beneficial to the school system at the PSO candidates night March 24.

"I came to the school committee with little experience," incumbent Diana Kornet said. "Now I've had four years of experience on subcommittees, learning how the schools are run. It takes years to become more effective."

She added the most important thing she had learned was to be willing "to hear all sides of an issue ... and to try not to have a preconceived opinion."

Incumbent John Langmaid said that his ten years on the school committee had benefitted him as a committee member. "I have a good memory of what's gone on in the schools for the past ten years," he said. "The more I'm around, the more I have to learn. I'm continually amazed at the things I didn't know." He also said that his years of experiences have given him an "unwillingness to stand apart."

Challenger Judy Volungis cited her experience, willingness to learn and knowledge of how school departments are run as her assets. She served as an elementary school teacher for nine years, and as a school volunteer in the Cohasset school system since then. "I know how education works," she said. "I think it can work better."

"A good education would take care of physical, mental and social needs," Volungis said, "and it would also see that the student is prepared for what he or she wants to do after high school. We may be offering the wrong courses."

Kornet agreed, saying the computer in the guidance office programmed to test students for career potential was an excellent start. "It gets the students thinking early," she said. "They are without pressure, but excited about what doors are open."

Langmaid said that although schools used to base teaching on the "Three R's," today listening and speaking have been added to that list. "Careers will take care of themselves if people are well prepared," he said, citing that three to four years of math, language and science are necessary courses.

But the candidates were split on House Bill 895, which would equalize Chapter 70 state aid to education, benefitting poorer districts.

"Although I jealously want to guard funds that come this way, it is essential to divide up funds," Kornet said. "But there is one flaw in the present method." She said the "Save Harmless Act" in effect uses up 90 percent of the funds that the state has, so only 10 percent is left to go toward the original formula. "I support the original formula wholeheartedly," she said.

But Volungis said that she couldn't support the bill.

"Philisophically, the bill is very good, but most people chose to live here because the education is better. I can't see the bill benefitting us if it equalizes by bringing us down. I can't support that."

Langmaid said the effect of the bill, if passed, will be up to the advisory board, the selectmen, and the town meeting. "But as far as my opinion, I have opposed past attempts to change the state aid formula because it's bad for the Cohasset taxpayers."

The three will be running against each other for two three-year school committee seats. Town elections are April 9.

Debate on school raises

Recently several school committee members have contacted the Mariner to say the school budget must include staff salary raises while other town departments' budgets do not include these raises.

This school salary amount, excluding inflation, was estimated in January to be $262,000. Town Accountant Bill Signorelli said the other department raises are reflected in a roundabout, but overall, budget picture. The town can spend $383,657 more this year than last year. The schools were given $97,929 more, the regional school assessment was budgeted at $3,004 and the water department was given $2,221.

All other town departments were allocated $278,512 more. This amount includes operating expenses and also reflects costs for the town and school's debt service, pensions and health insurance which amounted to $192,343.

After subtracting operating expenses and the debt service, pension and health insurance from the addional town department amount of $278,512, $86,169 is left for salary and wages for town departments. Signorelli said this reflects a six percent increase for non-union employees and the Police and Fire Dept. unions.

Fire Chief Martin Dooley is here to stay

By Mike Berger

Fire Chief Martin Dooley's dream as a youth was to become a fire chief. He remembers chasing fire engines down the street. It was a family tradition.

He feels firefighters are a one-of-a-kind brand of people. While everyone else is running out of buildings, "we're running in."

"I must say we are a unique breed. I guess it has to be in your blood. It's not the highest paying job and it's a big denial of one's family, working long hours, days, nights, weekends and holidays.

"You know this kind of life calls for 100 percent dedication. It isn't always understood by people outside the fire service. In most cases it isn't understood within the family structure. We have the highest divorce rate including police, and a record of the highest injury and death rate," said Dooley.

"That is why I am very heavy on safety," he said.

Safety, fire prevention and public communication are Dooley's main forte. He strongly believes in community access and teamwork.

He has already inspected many industrial and commercial firms which haven't been inspected in years. He has begun stressing new sprinkler alarm systems in many commercial buildings, stepped up an in-house safety and maintenance program and started new programs for call firefighters and underwater rescue drills.

Dooley was born in Port Washington, Long Island, and is the third generation of a four-generation family involved in firefighting.

"My son is following in my footsteps," he said.

Dooley's grandfather was a volunteer firefighter in New York City and his father served as a volunteer in the Port Washington unit. Martin followed in his footsteps at 18 years old.

He joined the Army in 1956 when he was 20 years old. He served in the Army Corps of Engineers Fire Department and was stationed in Greenland.

Dooley left the Army in March of 1959 and worked in heavy construction for the Port Washington office of Helena Rubenstein Cosmetics. He was active in the Oil Chemical Atomic Workers Union and later became sergeant of arms. Dooley was also active in the plant's fire protection program.

In 1964, Dooley passed the Civil Service test and became a firefighter in Long Island. In 1968 he joined the Hartford Fire Department as a probationary firefighter. He worked himself up to become the deputy chief's aide in 1980 and was promoted to lieutenant in July of 1980.

He says he served 11 years on the busiest ladder company in the state, a unit answering 3,000 calls annually. Dooley also served as a commanding officer of Ladder 4, the second busiest unit in Hartford.

His knowledge of firefighting operations keeps growing. He has served as deputy chief of the State Fire School and is just short of an associate's degree in Fire Science. Dooley has also done some course study at the National Fire Academy in Maryland.

While working as a Hartford firefighter, Dooley was commended three times for his work. He was nominated for a medal of valor and is awaiting final approval. He rushed into a building and rescued a woman from a heavily involved, smoke-filled fire without use of his mask. She had burns over 30 percent of her body, was unconscious and wasn't breathing when he arrived.

Dooley also remembers fighting the Hartford National Bank Building fire, a 23-story heavy working fire, especially on the top floors.

"I remember it was very hot and we weren't making any headway. We had a constant feeling of being up in the air," he said.

Then there was the longest rubbish fire in 1977 in an abandoned building. The fire lasted five days. "It got a little hairy. It started in a large abandoned building and spread from floor-to-floor and endangered the Hartford Courant newspaper building," Dooley said.

SMALL COMMUNITY

Doole said he's had no problem switching from a state capital like Hartford to a small town like Cohasset. "In fact it's like coming home to my home town of Port Washington. I feel very comfortable. My attitude is to stay here a lifetime. I hope the community feels the same way."

Dooley lives at 60 Summer St. with his wife, Joyce, Patrick, 23, a firefighter in East Hartford; Colleen, 21, a senior economics major at Simmons College, Boston, with a 4.0 grade point average.

DEPARTMENT REVIEW

Dooley wants each shift to have an acting officer. During his 12 weeks in office he has found his staff to be dedicated. Six firefighters are over 40 years old, so essentially his 24-member full-time force is young.

He has found a good mix of welders, carpenters, and plumbers and figures the department will save a lot of in-house maintenance money.

Dooley said he is now short two men and is awaiting a Civil Service list. "When we get those two men, our staff will be adequate to meet our present needs."

A few firefighters have degrees in fire science and a few are in the process of earning their degrees.

Some recent appointments were Capt. Mark Trask as the fire prevention officer and William Protulis will be in charge of the apparatus preventive maintenance program.

Although Capt. Roger Lincoln was first appointed chief and later resigned for personal reasons, Dooley finds him a superb officer and has an excellent rapport with him.

Dooley is interested in mutual aid drills with Scituate and Hingham and will be working with Chief Walter Stewart of Scituate and Fletcher Patch of Hingham to set up the drills.

Another project will be to draw up enough funds for the cold water rescue drill equipment. The Call Force Benevolent Association is planning a fundraising drive to finance the water rescue suits. The force has four trained certified divers and Dooley hopes to train six more, including himself.

Dooley is happy with his call force personnel of 20 firefighters. There are now several call men who respond on a five day, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. shift.

Another project will be the purchase of five portable radios in the department and an updated telephone system, giving the department another available emergency line.

He would like some kind of grant ($3,000 to $5,000) so the department can purchase its own computer for payroll, pre-fire planning and fire prevention purposes.

Although the town will have a computer operational soon, the Fire Department will not be connected.

The Fire Prevention office will make regular inspections of all community buildings and commercial buildings. The inspections will go beyond the schools and nursing homes. Dooley would like the program to be expanded to the inspection of private dwellings, but permission must be granted by the selectmen.

The number of chimney fires in Cohasset has alarmed Dooley and he feels a public information program must be started which stresses periodic cleaning and the proper way to burn materials.

HOBBIES

When he isn't at the fire station, Dooley likes to play and watch golf and also enjoys swimming. He is the collector of fire department related statues and antiques and also enjoys touring the flea markets with his wife.

"I am also a heavy reader and have a lot of bookcases."

He believes in "learning by watching," and a good example must shown from the top because it filters down. He says he is a traditionalist, but only to a point. "I do not like getting in the way of progress."

John Langmaid stresses experience as an asset

By Jane Lane

John Langmaid III is fighting to keep his membership on the Cohasset School Committee. A six-year veteran of the committee, Langmaid feels his experience and knowledge of the Cohasset school system will continue to benefit the educational system in this town.

When asked how his two terms on the school committee will contribute to the committee, Langmaid replied, "A lot of people, when they run for elected office, do so because they are dissatisfied with the ways things are going. They want to make a lot of quick changes. Once they are in office, they recognize the bureaucracy and legal system we have, and what you can do is severely circumscribed.

"How you best accomplish goals is to nurture the things in bureaucracy that are good, and by supporting goals. A positive approach toward doing things gets you further than a negative approach. Then you can eliminate the things you don't like."

When asked if he thought current school committee is doing a good job for the school system in Cohasset, Langmaid answered, "I think the committee is doing a very good job of representing the public in determining how the schools should be run. This is evident from the high quality of students who graduate and from the academic, athletic, and extra curricula activities which win the students high marks.

"But there is always room for improvement. If you stand still, you go backwards. One area which I think the committee needs to improve is that too frequently the public is aware of minor disagreements among committee members, rather than the positive things the committee is doing. We have to work harder — not to eliminate our differences, because it's healthy to have different ideas — but when the committee comes to a decision, it should be seen as being supported by the entire committee. I think this is important for the community and for the staff. They are going to put out more if they see the support of a united committee. If they see the committee going one more step, everyone does the same."

The incumbent noted, "In any organization, it is the people at the top who set the tone. If you see your boss working harder, then automatically you will work harder."

Langmaid said the most important issue confronting the committee has continually been finances.

"I don't think people are aware of the position all town services are being put in — if the town indefinitely can only increase its tax levy by two and one-half percent. There are many uncontrollable costs such as pensions, county and regional assessments and insurance costs that are growing larger.

"Salaries are growing faster than two and one-half percent," he added. "We have been squeezing for about five years now. And there is no place left to squeeze, although the town is faced with probable major expenditures such as the central sewer system and the landfill."

Langmaid continued, "Where is the money going to come from to support all these services and at the same time continue to have a school system which is not only competitive with other systems from similar socio-economic levels, but which will have to be moving more aggressively to the new computer age."

Because of the continuing declining enrollment, Langmaid said substantive curriculum adjustments will have to be made in the future "which will allow all students to reach their maximum learning capabilities without some students being left behind. It is going to be a difficult task for the future school committee," he said.

When asked if the school system should be appropriated an equal amount of money as other town departments, Langmaid said, "It is the legal responsibility of the school committee to develop a budget for the school department adequate to educate all the students to their potential.

"At the same time, the committee must take into consideration the restraints — aside from 2½ — on public spending. It is the difficult job of the advisory board to balance the requests of all different town departments within a limited budget and make recommendations to town meeting."

Langmaid continued, "But it is town meeting who decides whether or not they wish to spend more or less money on their schools. As a member of the school committee, I feel a primary responsibility to advocate a first-rate education. I feel the people of Cohasset want that educational system and can afford to have that educational system. It's up to town meeting to decide whether I have asked for too much, and it's up to me to persuade them I need every penny I've asked for."

In regard to recent discussions about the school budget between the school committee and advisory board, Langmaid was asked what the relationship should be between the two committees.

"The school committee feels it isn't the position of the advisory board to say we must cut this and this from the school budget," he said.

"Their position should be more to ask us why we think we need this amount of money — are we doing things in the school department such as expanding programs? Or there may be reasons why we are doing things more expensively — and is that necessary? It is also the job of the advisory board to help the town departments to get the money. They have the elected responsibility to determine the need. The roles between the two committees have become a little mixed, and it's been more adversarial than it should be."

When asked what innovative ways the school committee could develop to maintain the quality of education in Cohasset, Langmaid said, "I don't think it is the committee's position to develop innovative educational plans. It is our job to hire administrators and give them the support they need so they may learn of new alternative ideas which can be presented to the committee. The committee's job is to determine which of the ideas is best adaptable to the community."

Looking back on his past experiences with the school committee, Langmaid said previous accomplishments have been through the cooperation of the entire board, not just one member.

"It hasn't been a static committee," he said, "so a lot of people deserve recognition for the product we have put out — the graduating student. Considering our per-pupil expenditure is one-third less than in towns we like to consider ourselves in competition with, towns such as Weston, Wellesley and Lexington, I think there can be no cause for complaints about the job the committee has done over the last half-dozen years."

He added, "Eight years ago, this school system was in turmoil. The morale of the staff was low. There was hostility between the staff and the school committee. For a number of years there has been a healing process. Only time and the nurturing of relationships could heal the rift between the townspeople, and the rift between the committee and staff. Today we have a staff which is concerned about the students. And the relationship between the staff and the town is becoming better. We haven't had a grievance in arbitration in the past three or four years because the administration has been able to satisfy people, because there is trust. That is the most important thing the school committee has fostered."

John Langmaid

Langmaid, 48, lives with his wife Chartis, and their children, Bill and Jamie, at 90 Beechwood Street. Until he was permanently disabled ten years ago, Langmaid worked as a securities analyst for a New York Stock Exchange firm. He is a graduate of Williams College and has a master's degree in geology from Yale University.

The town meeting warrant... Part II

Here is the second half of the major town meeting warrants from Article 26 — 34 and some additional Advisory Committee recommendations.

Town Meeting will convene Saturday, April 2 at 1 p.m. in the Cohasset High School Auditorium.

ARTICLE 26

(Inserted by the Board of Selectmen, Henry Ainslie, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to raise and appropriate, or transfer from available funds the sum of $7,000 to demolish the North Cohasset Fire Station Building and to fill and level where necessary; or act on anything relating thereto.

Not Recommended by Advisory Committee — Funds could be available to paint and patch present building for above reasons.

ARTICLE 27

(Inserted by the Board of Selectmen, Henry Ainslie, chairman — Citizens Petition.)

To amend Article IV, Section 4, Police Chief of the Town By-Laws and insert the following:

Delete paragraph (c) and insert the following:

(c) To see if the Town will vote to accept the provisions of Section 97A of Chapter 41 of the General Laws (Ter. Ed.) as inserted by Chapter 595 of the Acts of 1948 which provide generally for the establishment of a Police Department to be under the supervision of a Chief of Police, who shall be in immediate control of property used by said Department and of the police officers whom he shall assign to their respective duties and who shall obey his orders; or act on anything relating thereto.

Not Recommended by Advisory Committee — Recently changed from Sec. 97A to Sec. 97. Feel it is irresponsible to keep changing the status in answer to a specific situation. The Board of Selectmen was recently enlarged in part to meet some of the stated problems.

ARTICLE 28

(Inserted by the Board of Selectmen, Henry Ainslie, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to instruct the Board of Selectmen to petition the General Court of Massachusetts to enact the following, or act on anything relating thereto:

"An act providing that the Office of Chief of the Police Department of the Town of Cohasset shall be subject to the Civil Service Law and Rules.

Section 1:

Chapter 257 of the Acts of 1978 is hereby repealed.

Section 2:

The office of Chief of the police Department of the Town of Cohasset shall be subject to Chapter thirty-one of the General Laws.

Section 3:

Notwithstanding any general or special law to the contrary, the incumbent of such office on the effective date of this act may continue to serve in such office, until the earlier of his resignation, retirement or removal by the appointing authority of such town, but the provisions of Chapter thirty-one shall not otherwise be applicable to such incumbent.

Section 4:

This act shall take effect upon its passage."

Advisory Committee will recommend from the floor of Town Meeting.

ARTICLE 29

(Inserted by the Planning Board, Barbara Power, chairwoman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to amend the Zoning By-Laws to permit wind energy conversion system (hereinafter referred to as "WECS") under certain conditions as follows:

By striking the definition of "structure" appearing in the definition section and substituting in its place and stead the following definition:

"Structure — A combination of materials combined at a fixed location to give support or shelter, including without limitation, a bin, bridge, building, dock, fence, framework, flagpole, platform, retaining wall, reviewing stand, sign, stadium, swimming pool, tank, tennis court, tent, tower, trestle, tunnel and wind energy conversion system."

By adding to the definition section following the definition of "watershed" and prior to the definition "yard" the following definition: "Wind Energy Conversion System. (WECS) A device which converts wind energy to mechanical or electrical energy."

By adding to the Table of Area Regulations under the caption "Residential" following:

Wind Energy Conversion — Residential — R-A, R-B, R-C; — Non-Residential — DB, WB, HB, LI.

System — Residential — SP, SP, SP; — Non-Residential — SP, SP, SP, SP.

By adding to Section 5.4, Table of Area Regulations a new Section 5.4.7 which shall provide as follows:

"5.4.7 Notwithstanding the provisions with respect to setback for side yard and rear yard and for height, the minimum setback distance for all WECS from any abutters property line shall be at least equal to the maximum height of the machine from grade plus twenty feet; provided, however, that in no event shall a WECS be more than one hundred feet in height from grade. Setbacks will be measured to the center of the structure base.

By adding to section 12.41, Subparagraph 10 which shall provide as follows:

"10. In addition to all other conditions for a Special Permit, to the extent applicable, a Wind Energy Conversion System shall also comply with the following conditions:

(i)access — Climbing access to the WECS shall be limited by (1) the installation of a fence with locked gate around the WECS; and (2) by limiting WECS climbing apparatus to no lower than 20 feet from the ground. In addition to complying with all other provisions of this By-Law with respect to fences, the fence shall be no lower than six feet and including in such a manner as to restrict passage through the fence, including such construction as stockade, woven wood, or chain link.

(ii) Public Good — A Special Permit shall not be granted if its installation will cause excessive noise or interfere with local television and/or radio reception."; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — This is a necessary addition to the zoning by-law if windmills are to be allowed by special permit.

ARTICLE 30

(Inserted by the Board of Selectmen, Henry Ainslie, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to raise and appropriate or transfer from available funds, $5,000 for the design and construction of a ramp to provide access for handicapped individuals to Town Hall and authorize the Selectmen to contract with architects/engineers and general contractors for the design and construction of the ramp; or act on anything relating thereto.

Not Recommended by Advisory Committee — Would only allow access to first floor and only until offices are located there would this serve a real need.

(Inserted by the Board of Selectmen, Henry Ainslie, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to accept the provisions of Chapter 545 of the Acts of 1982 to require certain buildings or additions thereto to have automatic sprinkler systems unless there is not adequate water pressure and sufficient water to activate the sprinkler system, or unless the discharge of water would be a danger in the event of fire; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee Recommends — A fire prevention regulation authorized by State statue.

ARTICLE 32

(Inserted by the Board of Selectmen at the request of the Committee to Study Town Government Structure, Donna McGee, chairwoman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to amend Article V of the General By-Laws of the Town of Cohasset by adding a new Section 17 creating a Permanent By-Law Committee to provide as follows:

"Section 17 By-Law Committee.

(a) The By-Law Committee shall consist of three (3) members, appointed for three (3) year terms, provided that one (1) of the initial appointees shall serve for one (1) year, another for two (2) years and the third for three (3) years. At least one member of the By-Law C mmittee shall be a member of the Massachusetts Bar.

(b) Appointments shall be made by a Committee consisting of the Moderator, the Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, and the Chairman of the Advisory Committee.

(c) The By-Law Committee shall review any Article proposed in the Warrant for any Annual Town Meeting or Special Town Meeting which involves a change in or an addition to the By-Laws of the Town of Cohasset. If the wording or indexing of the proposed change or addition does not conform to the pattern or style of the present By-Laws, the Committee shall so advise the Selectmen; the Committee shall also recommend appropriate placement of the change or addition within the By-Laws.

(d) When the Town in an Annual Town Meeting or Special Town Meeting has adopted a change in or addition to the By-Laws, the By-Law Committee shall insure the change or addition be typed and xeroxed in sufficient quantity and inserted in its proper place in each copy of the By-Laws located in the Town Hall or any other public office in the Town and in those copies in the Paul Pratt Memorial Public Library. The cost of the typing and xeroxing shall be borne be the Town"; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee recommends — Necessary to keep all by-laws up to date and review any revisions requested.

ARTICLE 33

(Inserted by the Personnel Committee, Clifford Mitman, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to amend Article XI of the General By-Laws, the Personnel Classification and Compensation Plan, as follows:

By striking subparagraph (b) of Section 1 and substituting in its place the following subparagraph (b) (i) and (b) (ii):

"(b) (i) Subject to subsection (ii) hereof, the provisions of this Article shall apply to all positions in the Town except the following:

(A) Those filled by general election:

(B) Those under the control of the School Committee; and

(C) Those provisions of this By-Law shall not apply to the Executive Secretary, Police Chief or Fire Chief, except to the extent that contracts with individuals holding those positions incorporate provisions of this By-Law and in that event administration of such provisions shall be under the jurisdiction of the Board of Selectmen"; or act on anything relating thereto.

Recommended by Advisory Committee.

ARTICLE 34

(Inserted by the Board of Selectmen, Henry Ainslie chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to amend Article V, Section 11 of the Town By-Laws by striking subsection (a) and substituting in its place and stead the following:

"(a) The Cohasset Harbor Committee shall consist of seven members appointed by the Selectmen as follows immediately after the 1983 Annual Town Meeting:

The Harbormaster for an indefinite term,

A representative of the Yacht Club for a three-year term,

A representative of the Sailing Club for a three-year term,

A representative of the commercial fishermen for two-year term,

An independent member for a two-year term,

A representative of the commercial fishermen for one-year term,

And, a representative of the Recreation Commission for a one-year term.

Each appointment thereafter shall be for three years"; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee Recommends — Improve organizational procedure.

ARTICLE 35

(Inserted by the Board of Sewer Commissioners, Joseph Gwinn, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to raise or appropriate a sum of money for engineering investigations including on-site samplings in the so-called "Phase I" proposed sewer area as defined in a plan entitled "Facilities Plan for Waste Water Management dated May 31, 1979" to determine the feasibility of on-site or other alternative or innovative methods of waste water disposal in that area; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee will recommend from the floor of Town Meeting.

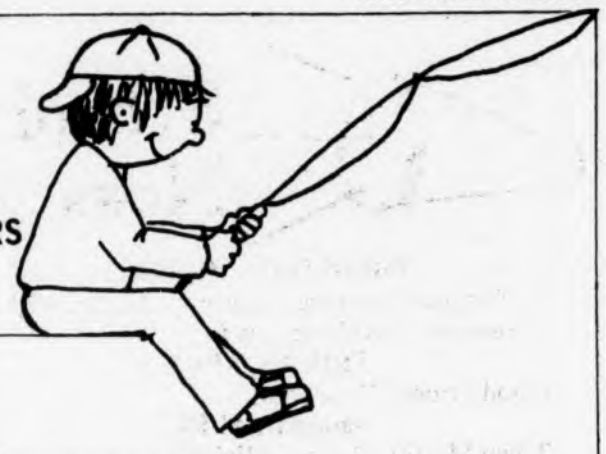
(Inserted by the Board of Sewer Commissioners, Joseph Gwinn, chairman, and others.)

To see if the Town will vote to amend Article 4 adopted at the Special Town Meeting held on November 29, 1982 to permit the Board of Sewer Commissioners to execute and deliver any contracts with engineers or consultants for the preparation of working plans and specifications for the construction of a sewer plant and system in accordance with a report entitled "Facilities Plan for Waste Water Management dated May 31, 1979 as amended; or act on anything relating thereto.

Advisory Committee will recommend from the floor of Town Meeting.

RECENT ADVISORY BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS



Article 12 concerns raising and appropriating or borrowing a sum of money to rehabilitate the water distribution system along Margin Street and Atlantic Avenue from Elm Street to Nivhols Road.

Recommended — money to be used in conjunction with State grant monies. Water pipes in poor condition. This is a start on replacement program which must be planned in advance by the Water Department.

Recommended — necessary to appropriate grant money already received for leak detection purposes.

The Weird Video Game
By Arthur Meacham

When I woke up and spit the sand out of my mouth I wondered why the sky was green. I was at a beach whose water was yellow. I lifted myself off the ground and thought about how I got there.

Earlier in that dreaded Monday I'd headed for the Cohasset Pizza House to play its Zaxxon video game with my newly earned money. I happily slid a quarter into the slot and pressed the one player button. I started playing and played like I'd never played before. I whizzed past the top score with ease. Just when I thought I could go on forever a gun stuck out from the top of the machine and aimed at me while a metallic voice said, "So you think you can beat Zaxxon?" The gun fired and I just found myself there on the beach.

My main concern right then was getting back home. I began to explore the area and soon found a town. It was filled with a lot of purple creatures with four legs. They had one leg pointing up, down, forward and backward. They would place one foot in front of the other and sort of roll to get around. They also had one arm sticking out on each side. When they saw me they got really excited and said stuff like, "I can't wait until the 'Enquirer' hears about this," and "I always thought there were no such things as aliens." They started chasing me around trying to catch me to do some experiments on.

When they chased me past a video arcade I got an idea. I got down on my knees and pleadingly begged, "Please spare just one quarter for a poor alien." The creatures didn't think too much of this until one of them said, "Oh, the poor alien wants some Reese's Pieces." They liked that. Soon all of them were holding out weird quarters with pictures of feet on them and coaxing me toward them.

I just grabbed one of the coins and darted into the arcade. I ran up to the Zaxxon machine and started playing. I'd gotten to the point in the game where I was before and a machine-like voice said, "So you think you can beat Zaxxon?" A gun came out of the top and fired...

When I woke up and spit the sand out of my mouth I wondered why the sky was purple.

The Scariest Morning
By Elizabeth Hurley

I came home from school sweating because of the hot summer sun. It was the last day of school, which made me very excited, except I didn't have anything planned for the summer.

During the few days beginning the vacation, everyone felt we needed some rain because of the dry, hot weather we were having.

On my seventh day of vacation, I got a letter from my cousin. It was an invitation to stay for two weeks with them. I really wanted to go because I had never been to their house before and also, my summer vacation wouldn't be boring if I went.

On my way to Georgia it started raining and when I finally arrived at my cousin's house, it was pitch black. Just as I was getting out of the car my cousin came running out of the front door to greet me. She took me inside and right upstairs to say hi to her mother and father. After I said hi, my cousin Pam helped me unpack my belongings. Then, while it was still raining, we went to bed since it was getting late.

Later on that night I woke to the sound of thunder. I didn't know where I was and the darkness didn't make it easy to find out. Suddenly there were flashes of light and I remembered where I was. I lay back on my pillow and tried to fall asleep, but I couldn't. I looked over to where Pam slept. I didn't want to wake Pam, just to ask her for a glass of water to get to sleep. So I decided to get it myself. I quietly crept downstairs and into the kitchen. I looked around for the refrigerator and I saw it next to a dark, dusty corner.

I started to walk towards the corner until I saw something moving. I felt like running to the safety of my bed and to Pam. However, I felt my feet frozen to the cold floor and goose bumps bristle all over me. Suddenly I let out a scream! The mysterious creature in the corner gave a loud meow and ran upstairs. I stood in horror for what seemed to be ten minutes, but was only a couple of minutes.

Then I turned around and there was Pam, my aunt and my uncle. They were anxious to know what all the screaming was and why the cat went wild. I explained the situation. I suddenly realized I had not gotten my drink yet, and as I moved toward the refrigerator, the cat darted in front of me. I was again startled, but we all burst out laughing.

My aunt made me sit down as she proceeded to prepare us all a cool glass of lemonade before sinking back into our beds and, hopefully, into a deep, dreamless sleep without thinking of cats.

The Magic Pen
By Erin Gregory

Once I was on a sailing ship,
Going out to the seas,
I was with my friends on a trip
To the Land of wine and cheese.
We were sailing about and
Without a doubt
We were lost in the open sea.
The boat was gloomy
And not very roomy
I was scared
And weak in the knees.
We sailed away
For a year and a day
But got there in the middle of May.
There were Canibals, Sharks,
Even some Larks on the Isle of Wine and Cheese.
But there was the wine
So we decided to dine
And drink 'til quarter past nine
But after the trip we boarded the ship
And...

Then it stopped, the pen stopped writing and finally just fell on the table; it seemed to have lost all of its power. Maybe it died, maybe it broke. But for now I do not know. I'll get some more ink and fill it again and maybe it will be all right.

The Creature from Outer Space
By Allison Reilly

It seemed like a normal day when I woke up, but little did I know...

I trudged into homeroom wishing it was Friday. I plunked myself into my seat. Mr. Deakin walked into the room saying, "O.K., take out your herring gull books and turn to page--. "

His dreaded instructions were interrupted by a deafening squeak and flashing lights. My friend sitting next to me yelled, "Holy hamburger!!" which was followed by shouts from other kids.

My heart was leaping and jumping, when suddenly Mr. Ekberg came on the intercom saying, "Uh, please excuse this interruption, uh, I don't want to alarm you, but, uh, we are under attack by, uh, --"

In the background we heard a loud voice shouting, "OK, get this dude outta here!!" There was the sound of a struggle, then the same loud shrill voice came on, "All you whimpy Earthlings out there — we're gonna take this school by storm!"

The intercom was silenced, then the room was babbling with voices. I glanced at my friend who was sitting absolutely dazed.

Suddenly a huge creature moved awkwardly toward us. My friend stood up in screaming rage. "You get out of here, you stinking alien!! I'll kill you!"

"You mean you'll try!" someone yelled. Beth was across the room and upon the thing screaming, followed by me. Then pretty soon the whole class was hurling themselves with flying fists. The thing was able to get away from us. Then it ran (or more like limped and hobbled) to the door screaming, "Retreat!!"

Then the room was filled with horrible squeaks and groans. Lights flashed and the floor vibrated.

Then everything was completely normal again and we were all sitting in our seats. "O.K., now, as I was saying, please take out the gull books and turn to page 16," Mr. Deakin said calmly.

"As calm as he may seem," I thought, "I know he must feel the same way I do..." It had all been a very strange experience!!

A Bug On Her Nose!
By Eileen O'Connor

It all happened one day when Tina and I were playing catch. I am Mary, a short, very shy, blond-haired young girl. Tina is my sister, a mischievous, tall, blond-haired twelve-year-old.

Tina can be a real pain, like the time she made curlers out of dead gypsy moths and curled my hair. Ugh! I can still feel them!

She can also be really nice, like the time she took the blame when I made a milkshake and the blender top flew off.

Anyway, one day Tina and I were playing catch outside and it started to rain. So we thought it would be o.k. if we played inside. Mom wasn't home, and we'd be done long before she got home. We went inside the house and continued playing. Suddenly the ball flew off course, heading straight for Mom's favorite vase!

Tina dove for the ball and...and...and she caught it! Phew! But, when she stood up, we saw what remained of Mom's favorite vase. Tina picked up some of the pieces and looked as though she would cry. I knew how she felt; I almost wanted to cry myself. If Mom ever found out, she would kill us. I walked over to see if, maybe, we could glue it back together. Not a chance! I couldn't even count the pieces, they were so little.

Just then Mom walked in. She had a tight expression on her face and when she saw us it got tighter. Tina just stood there, trembling, holding the broken pieces in her hand. Mom really let us have it; she hollered her head off.

When she finally let us go, Tina and I ran upstairs and burst out laughing. Have you ever seen someone with a bug resting comfortably on her nose holler their head off?

The Shadows Didn't Bother Her But The Sounds Were Mysterious To Her
By Amy Hobbs

I have a story to tell you about my dearest friend, Tabitha. But don't tell anyone because if you do The Talking Shadows of Henrietta will be out to get you.

The story begins one day when Tabitha was walking down the sidewalk just as the sun was setting. She felt funny being in the bad section of town alone. For she knew that something mysterious was going to happen. But she didn't know what. It was Sunday and Tabitha's mother had jsut asked her to run to Curtis for some milk and the closest Curtis was in the bad section of town.

As she neared the traffic lights she noticed that there were all kinds of shadows around her. But that didn't bother her. It was just the sounds that came from the shadows that were so mysterious at first to her. It was the sound of a band playing, but then the sounds stopped and a tuba played a solo.

Tabitha stopped. She realized what it was right away. It was her sister Henrietta's band playing and the tuba solo was Henrietta. That was the last concert Henrietta played in before she died last year. Henrietta was 14 when she died and Tabitha was 10. Henrietta died from cancer. Tabitha remembered all the pain that came with the cancer.

Quickly she ran into Curtis and out. The sounds of the shadows were still there. Tabitha, all of a sudden, heard a voice that sounded like Henrietta's voice. She heard it say, "I love you, Tabitha, I love you, Tabitha," and then one more time the voice said, "I love you, Tabitha."

All of a sidden Tabitha turned around and found a piece of tuba music. She ran home quickly. Tabitha never told her parents about The Talking Shadows of Henrietta. So I ask you again to please keep my dearest friend Tabitha's secret a secret.

But now, every time Tabitha goes to those traffic lights, The Shadows of Henrietta speak to her, and every time the voice says, "I love you, Tabitha" three times.

Now this ends Tabitha's story and remember, don't tell anyone or The Talking Shadows of Henrietta will be out to get you.

AFS EXCHANGE-HOSTS NEEDED

Barbara Spooner announced the AFS will host a short-term exchange with the AFS Student Club from Casanovia High School, New York, near Syracuse, April 27 to 31. About a dozen students and three chaperones went from CHS to Casanovia a few weeks ago.

Twenty-four students and chaperones will be arriving in Cohasset, and will attend classes at Cohasset High. A social is planned for Friday, April 29, and a full day of sightseeing in Boston, April 30.

The purpose of the exchange is to provide an opportunity for AFS Club members unable to participate in the exchange program abroad, to experience some of the cultural diversity of the United States.

Spooner said any residents interested in hosting a student or chaperone in their home overnight should contact George Fortin, CHS AFS Coordinator, or Pip Gilmour, 383-6596.

GRADE 7 PROGRAM OF STUDIES

orientation

This year's sixth grade students will learn about their grade 7 program of studies at an assembly Monday, April 4 at the Deer Hill School.

CHS Principal Richard Streeter will distribute the program of studies and explain the liviing arts electives. Chairman of the high school foreign language department, Narkiewicz, will discuss the choices of foreign languages.

Grade 7 students are required to enroll in English, math, science, social studies, physical education and health education. They may choose between a foreign language and/or a living arts elective.

Students will be instructed to return the pink course selection sheets to school on or before Friday, April 8.

Parents are invited and encouraged to attend an information meeting on grade 7 curriculum and other aspects of junior high life, Thursday, April 7 at 7 p.m. in the new study hall of the high school. Department heads, administrators and guidance personnel will be there to answer questions.

Deer Hill kids run a town meeting

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Members of the League of Women Voters showed children in the fifth grades how to run their own town meeting last week.

After learning the history of town metings, the rules governing them and the duties of the major participants and officials, the students played the roles and debated "Article 52" — enacting a dog leash law.

The meetings with the four classes were so successful, League members returned to the school to produce the program in several other classrooms.

Marie Caristi, co-chairman of the Cohasset League and member Carol Martin, explained to Joanne Magoun's open space fifth grade class that originally Cohasset was part of Hingham but with poor roads, the trip to Hingham for town meetings, as often as four times a year, was difficult.

There is a legend of "riding and tieing" which grew out of this problem.

The family who owned a horse might ride it halfway to church or town meeting, then tie up the horse and walk the remaining distance. A poorer neighbor, who did not own a horse, would walk the first half of the trip, untie the tethered horse and ride the remaining distance.

In 1717, Cohasset was allowed to become a precinct of Hingham and the first town meeting in Cohasset was held in the church on the common July 14, 1718.

League members quizzed pupils on their understanding of the meaning of the words by-laws, warrant, quorum, moderator, selectmen and petition.

A row of chairs was turned to face the "voters," and pupils assumed the parts of selectmen, town clerk and advisory board members. Caristi acted as moderator, with gavel, and Martin acted as vote counter.

Children were issued cards with short speeches for dog officer, and for proponents and opponents of a leash law. They were also encouraged by Caristi to give their personal positions.

In Dorothy MacDonald's classroom Sue McNamara and Robin Suhrbier put on a similar performance. Because they had been told that the children were the "quiet group" they encouraged them to read off the cards, but not to express their own opinions, McNamara later explained. However, the children filled out sample voter registration cards, studied an actual specimen ballot and participated in a more structured town meeting.

The final vote on enactment of a leash law was three in favor and 10 opposed in Magoun's classroom, and an overwhelming voice vote in opposition in MacDonald's classroom.

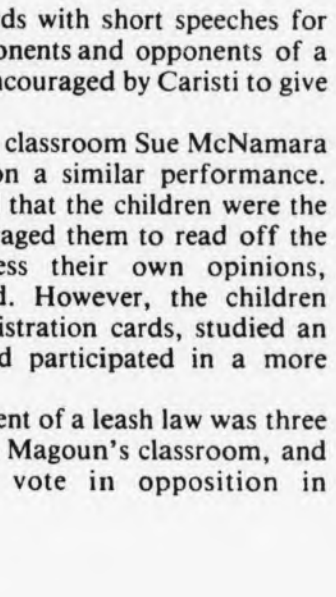
Kindergarten enrollment review

The school department expects about 80 children will enter kindergarten next year. Any recommendation to add one-half a kindergarten teacher will not be proposed until after student enrollment projections are finalized, administrative assistant Stephen Hart said.

About 80 students have been screened for kindergarten, he said.

Although no recommendations have been proposed to change the entrance age of students attending kindergarten, Hart said many studies have been completed by surrounding communities.



Supt. Crowell noted that if a student has not progressed in kindergarten, the policy has been to retain the student in that grade. But it is costly, he told the committee.

Hart said a report will be made to the school committee later this year on the kindergarten screening procedures initiated this year. He also noted that 99 percent of those children screened last week for kindergarten attended nursery school this year.

"The past two years have found me with little time to cultivate an active social life due to a rapid growth in my career and professional life. Since my day is long work-wise and my job is demanding – there is little time left to seek the social life that I would like. That's where Together came in. I respected their honesty, integrity and professionalism from the very start. As a result, I have met several people with the same interests and goals in life – not to mention the great times we have shared. Indeed, Together has filled a very important part of my life."

"I'm a busy professional and both my career and social life are important to me. I don't go to bars and I don't date people I work with. For me, Together has been an economical and time-saving way of meeting other compatible single adults. The counselors are sincerely concerned with introducing me to the kind of person I would like to meet. I recommend this service highly."

Sewer commissioners sound off on sewer articles

Sewer Commissioners Charlie DeSantis and Max Pounder offer their views on the two town meeting warrant articles involving town sewer plans.

Pounder drafted the articles, numbers 35 and 36, for town meeting. DeSantis wrote Article 4, approved at November's special town meeting.

Charles DeSantis

Sewer Commissioner Charles DeSantis and the selectmen's Advisory Committee for Sewer Alternatives urge the voters of Cohasset to vote "No" to the two sewer articles in the Town Meeting Warrant.

The second sewer article, number 36, denies the voters of Cohasset the detailed look at alternatives to a large central sewerasge treatment system that they demanded at Special Town Meeting, Nov. 29, 1982.

This article would return the town to the Metcalf and Eddy plan — a plan rejected by the town as unwanted and unaffordable.

Thirteen consulting engineering firms who submitted proposals believe that much less costly and effective, innovative and alternative solutions are feasible in Cohasset. Cohasset deserves a look at these alternatives. Cohasset deserves a full effort by its sewer commissioners and its board of selectmen in pursuing the objectives of Article 4 of the Nov. Special Town Meeting.

This new article declares that the selectmen and sewer commission have quit working for the town. We deserve more! Demand more! — by voting "No" to this article.

The first sewer article, number 35, requests a sum of money to pursue I/A in Phase I of the Metcalf and Eddy plan. Article 4 addresses the entire town. Town Counsel has determined that the town may use the services of its selected consultant through Special Town Counsel, thus this article is entirely unnecessary. We urge voters to defeat this article so we can pursue a plan for the entire town.

Max Pounder

The town of Cohasset through its special counsel Thomas Bracken, as assisted by the sewer advisory council, was not able to convince the attorney General's office or DEQE that additional funded studies on alternatives to new sewers were justified. Attorney Ann Rogers in her letter dated Feb. 18, states "...that what appeared at first to be a cheaper and easier alternative is not, when scrutinized, a viable one. For the above reasons, I decline to renegotiate the terms of agreements for judgment to allow time for a new study, and the division will not agree to fund such a study."

The town's case to the state was severely limited, in my opinion, since no field data exists to show that on site alternatives will work and be cost effective. No engineering analysis of other alternatives applied to this town exists, nor is there any schematic design that ties these alternatives together. The town is in the position of not being able to make a case for alternatives without funding and not being able to get funding without making a more definitive case.

The engineers interviewed to be hired to make the alternatives studies all enthusiastically endorsed this approach for the town. It seemed most appropriate to me to spend a reasonable amount of money to do enough data collection and study to attempt to prove or disprove to ourselves the merits of alternatives. To that end I proposed Article 35.

The amount of money I proposed for the study is $20,000. This amount is based on my knowledge, as an architect, of what site investigations cost, a telephone conference with Goldberg Zoino Soils Consulting Engineers for investigations of the Hillside and Bear Hill areas, and a knowledge of the specific arguments against alternatives made by the state that should be addressed by our study. Those specifics were forwarded toward Ward Engineering, was recommended by the sewer advisory committee, and designated by the sewer committee to do the study. The following is a letter, drafted by me, defining the scope of services required by the sewer commission.

The objective of the funding under Article 35, which we anticipate will be approved at town meeting, is to have you develop a schematic proposal and cost estimates based on actual on-site data sufficient enough to make a complete comparison with the proposed facilities plan prepared by Metcalf and Eddy.

Since Phase I of the current facilities plan is considered to be the most critical area by the state, particular attention should be given to it in order to make reasonable comparisons.

Please provide us with: 1. A complete scope of the services you propose to perform; 2. A schedule outlining the types of on-site investigations and locations that will be performed, and by whom; 3. A time schedule with an assumed authorization to proceed being given on Wednesday, April 6; 4. A breakdown of your fee schedule not to exceed $10,000. Town Meeting may authorize up to $20,000; however, the $10,000 limit will be exceeded only if additional work is justified and authorized by this board to provide more complete results.

The following items shall be addressed in your study but should not be considered as limiting the scope. 1. Where on-site systems are proposed, an analysis should be made to determine what percentage would be rebuilt by area, and how; what percent to be rehabed; and what percent to be untouched. An analysis of the projected failure rate, for the next 20 years, of all three categories should be made and the costs required to do those repairs or replacements; 2. Work required to modify the existing plant to meet its discharge permit, including addressing the harbor outfall requirement directed by the state; 3. Provisions for septage disposal within the town; 4. An analysis of funding, to be confirmed by DEQE or EPA defining which work would receive A and I funding and which would be considered as conventional. For example, small diameter pressure sewers could be classified as laterals and be eligible only for 50 percent state funding. Please use specific examples to back up your conclusions.

We request that all estimates use March 1983 as the base so that comparisons can be made without additional interpolations.

Along with your response to the above, please include a completed form of agreement between engineer and owner, for your proposed scope of work, to be received not later than Thursday, March 31.

Funds appropriated under Article 4 were ruled by town council as not eligible for this interim study.

The results of this report, which should be completed and analyzed in six to eight weeks, will give us a factual comparison with the $14,000,000 Phase I sewer plant and system option, and determine if the alternatives approach is the most cost effective and permanent solution to the town's waste water treatment problems.

If so, that report will be submitted to the DEQE for approval of funding for a full supplemental alternatives plan, the DEQE has already indicated to me that the state "will take under consideration any conclusive information that is submitted." If the state does not accept our arguments we at least then have good technical data that our attorneys can build an effective case around.

ARTICLE 36

The town of Cohasset is faced with a reduction of federal funds from 75 percent to 55 percent of construction cost for its proposed sewer system, the estimated costs as of March 1983 for Phase I, the only portion currently proposed for construction funding is $14,000. State and federal funds amount to $11,000,000 leaving $3,000,000 for the town's share.

The reduction in federal funds would be in excess of $2,000,000 which would have to be added to the town's costs. The state legislature has left itself the option to make up this funding cut. But it has neither agreed nor committed itself to do so.

Ann Rogers, of the attorney general's office, has stated in regard to the possibility of the state assuming the shortfall in funding, "I cannot make that assumption and although of course the sewer advisory commission may wish to take the risk that Cohasset may be obligated to pay the 20 percent shortfall, I am not willing to risk the additional delay that would be caused by the necessity for either Cohasset's or the Commonwealth's allotment of additional funds."

The funding cut-off date is October 1984 and requires working drawings and specifications and approvals to be completed by that date. An increase of 70 percent costs to the town would effectively kill this as a viable option.

Article 36 is intended to keep this option as well as retaining our position on the state's construction grants project priority list. We have until April 11 to accept this grant application delivered to us by the state and until May 11 to sign a contract with design engineers, or lose our position for funding on that list.

It is my intent to limit this contract with Metcalf and Eddy to a milestone point that would correspond to the completion date of the alternatives study proposed under Article 35.

Kornet worries about retaining Cohasset's best teachers

By Mike Berger

How do we retain the best teachers in our school system? How do we develop flexibility among our teachers and how can we keep good teachers in light of the career opportunities in the business world?

How should the school committee develop innovative and flexible approaches to maintain a quality education despite Prop. 2½?

These are the questions Diana Kornet, school committee chairman, feels are the pressing issues for the board in the future.

Diana is completing her fourth year on the school committee. She served one year to complete a vacancy and won a three-year seat in 1980.

Diana served as chairman for one year and has been board secretary. She is the mother of four children, a son, 14 years old and three daughters, 12, 10 and two years-old.

All of them are now enrolled or will enter Cohasset's public schools.

Diana graduated from Connecticut College with a B.A. in zoology and also took graduate courses in education at Lehigh University. She taught a Grade 6 science course in the Hanover, N.H., public school system. She also has a real estate brokerage license.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

During her four year tenure, she said her accomplishments have been to serve on a subcommittee to prepare a new teacher evaluation system. She said the system, prepared by residents, teachers and administrators, "hasn't really been put to the test yet, but will come in handy when it must be determined which tenured teachers will be retained."

She is pleased that the school committee has been able to tighten up the budget and is happy with the procedures the administrators and School Supt. Eugene Crowell have used to evaluate the fiscal costs of the system.

Another accomplishment she is happy about is the development of the Grades K-12 health curriculum and the drug and alcohol policy, developed with the input of administrators, school committee members and the community health advisory committee.

Despite the fiscal constraints of Prop. 2½, Kornet said it was an accomplishment for the school committee and for Cohasset High School to have achieved a 10-year accreditation while many communities have only achieved a five-year certificate.

COMMITTEE STATUS

Kornet is pleased the committee represents many geographic areas and several constituencies throughout the town and has the potential for serving the town "well."

"But there has to be less time spent on straightening out internal dissension on the school committee and more time spent constructively on serving the different segments of the community."

She also feels the school committee must do more work on public communication. "Since we have lost fiscal autonomy and we know many Cohasset citizens don't have children in the system, we must inform them how their tax dollars are supporting them.

Diana also feels there must be better communication between the school committee and all other boards in the town, especially the advisory committee, personnel board and selectmen.

PRESSING ISSUES

With the fiscal constraints, Diana feels the school system must come to terms with retaining the best teachers in the system. She also feels it is important to have a good mix of age and experience in the staff and a staff which includes young teachers. This may be difficult, she said, to achieve in the face of declining enrollment.

It is also important for the staff to develop flexibility and for its teachers to be certified in other subject matters so the school committee may have greater staffing flexibility.

PROP. 2½

"I have great confidence in a community's ability to decide where and how its money should be spent. The town is usually fiscally responsible. Since Prop. 2½ passed, I don't think we can meet our obligations without state aid and more state education funds," she said.

"That really goes against my thinking. I think the town can do it better, but Prop. 2½ limited town spending and not state spending. I wish, we, the town, could raise the money needed. But we not longer have that latitude of spending.

"Education is changing. Look at computers. Staff should be given raises. Inflation says we should. In light of Prop. 2½ we have to find the most efficient ways of using the money we have. But I wish we could spend more where we need it. I have more confidence in the town than the bureaucracy of the state," Diana said.

INNOVATIVE APPROACHES

Kornet said the school committee must investigate job sharing and using part-time positions when it meets the needs of the school system.

She also feels cable may be the silver lining in future committee budgets because of its teaching potential and flexible options.

IS THE CURRENT BUDGET METHOD FAIR?

"I don't think it's fair that we should be told to be level funded. The School Department has to swallow all the raises in the staff and admiminstration and meet all of the contractual obligations. Eighty percent of the budget is people and it's not fair that we absorb a vast amount of raises when other department raises are treated in a separate warrant article," she said.

Diana also feels the town's accounting practices should be uniform for all departments. She would like to see the school department reimbursed for water, sewerage and unemployment costs rather than the current practice of the state reimbursement going to the town's general fund.

RELATIONSHIP WITH THE ADVISORY COMM.

The school committee should meet more frequently with the advisory committee. She feels the advisory committee should be renamed to be the finance committee and its members elected so the board may receive its full respect "it needs and deserves," she said.

FINAL COMMENT

"I am willing to listen to any point of view. I try not to go to any committee meeting with a pre-conceived opinion. I welcome input among all citizens and urge a constructive dialogue. We should work towards what's best for the school system," Diana said.

Cohasset's computer firm

DataNational Corporation, a specialist in computer equipment and services for municipalities, was selected to provide hardward and software for Cohasset. Cohasset joins Duxbury, Hingham, Braintree and Norwell, who are already working with the Hingham-based company.

Joe Kaminski, DataNational president said, "The company's recent rapid growth is partially due to its proven experience in satisfying the unique needs of municipalities, as well as the general increase in demand for computers to help reduce municipal expenses because of Proposition 2½."

Library Information Line...

The libraries in Cohasset, Marshfield and Scituate are providing this column on questions asked at the libraries and on new information sources acquired. This week the column is written by Bruce Brigell, Reference Librarian at the Ventress Library in Marshfield.

Q. What is the formula for converting temperature readings in Farenheit to the Celcius system?

A. To convert Farenheit temperature to Celcius, subtract 32 from the Farenheit reading and multiply the result by 5 and divide the sum by 9.

Q. How is gelatin derived?

A. Gelatin is a protein derived from the skin, white connective tissue and bones of animals. In the commercial production of Gelatin for use in food products, edible grade porkskins are boiled to produce collagen which is then treated with acids to produce gelatin. Gelatin is used in quite a number of foods to preserve flavor and provide texture.

Q. When was the last eruption of Mount Vesuvius in Italy? I believe there was one within the past few years.

A. The 1983 World Almanac reports the last eruption of Mount Vesuvius as 1944. Perhaps the recent volcanic eruption of Mount Etna (1981) in Italy is the one you are thinking of.

Q. At what temperature is dry ice formed?

A. Dry ice is the solid form of carbon dioxide. At normal atmospheric pressure carbon dioxide will change directly from a gas to a solid at a temperature of -109.6 Farenheit.

Q. In my reading I have come across the Latin phrase "Pons Asinorum." What is the meaning of this phrase?

A. The Latin phrase "pons asinorum" literally means "bridge of asses." It is used for the most part as an idiom to designate a problem or test of ability for the inexperienced or ignorant.

Q. Is West Germany the Federal Republic of Germany or the German Democratic Republic?

A. West Germany is officially the Federal Republic of Germany, with the name German Democratic Republic being the diplomatic appelation of East Germany.

Q. Which provinces are known as the "Basque Provinces" of Spain?

A. The Basque people occupy the areas on the southeast corner of the Bay of Biscay and the adjoining mountainous provinces of the Pyrenees. Their homeland is politically divided between the countries of France and Spain. The Basque provinces in Spain are named Navarre, Alava, Vizcaya and Guipuzcoa.

Judy Volungis wants some changes made

By Moria McCarthy

Judy Volungis is running for school committee because she wants to see some changes made.

"We need to set goals," she said in an interview. "The present committee hasn't set goals. How can you know where you'll be five years from now, if you haven't set goals for where you want to be?"

One of the goals Volungis would set would be to make the school committee's actions accountable to the public.

"The voters need to know how and why their tax money is being spent, and why it's necessary. People will give more if they know what it's being spent on."

One way to do this, Volungis said, would be to prepare a monthly financial report that would show the town exactly how much the committee has to spend.

"We also have to keep the school committee meetings open. It's very important to keep them open and honest," she said.

Volungis would also like to look to industry for input "into what they want from us, and how they can help us." She said the industry could help the schools to understand the job market, and could also give donations and grants. "It's time for the school committee to be innovative, instead of just taking from the taxpayers."

Judy Volungis

She pointed out that the Cohasset taxpayers approved Proposition 2½ by almost 80 percent, so the town should try to work within the constraints of it.

Volungis holds a B.A. in government from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, as well as a master's in elementary education from Worcester State College.

She has served in Cohasset as community resource chairman of the Osgood School Communication Council, as well as a classroom volunteer and a room mother. She has also served as director of the Cohasset Community Center.

She has nine years of active teaching experience in elementary grades, and trains and evaluates student teachers from area colleges.

Through this experience, Volungis has seen that Cohasset is in need of an evaluation of curriculum. "We need to bring the private sector in, to find out what they're looking for," she said. "Are we preparing our students the right way? Are they ready for the world? That goes for students who are going to college, as well as for those who are going to work."

As far as the school committee's relationship with the advisory board, Volungis said it is "important to keep on good ground with the advisory board." In relation to the $48,000 that the advisory board is looking to cut from the school budget, she said. "No one likes to make cuts, especially in the past two or three years ... but if we don't accept the cuts, the police, fire, and highway departments will be looking for hand outs too.

"The school committee has the most employees to pay, so they should get the most money, but percentage wise, all the town departments should be equal." She added that the fire and police were important departments too.

Volungis and her husband Daniel are long time Cohasset residents and have two children in the Cohasset school system. Dean is in kindergarten at Osgood, and Tara is in the fourth grade at Deer Hill.

Deer Hill School roof backed

The school facilities committee and the advisory board will support spending $20,000 to roof part of the Deer Hill School. Standing water, which has accumulated on the roof, may have caused damage to the roof beams. The repairs are also recommended by architectural consultant Frank Bagge. Bagge is completing a maintenance management survey to determine what school roofs need attention.

Staff evaluations procedure

The school committee approved authorization for committee members to review teacher and administrative staff evaluations and personnel records.

On the advice of town counsel, the school committee was informed this was a procedure which could be followed annually at this time in the school year.

Supt. Eugene Crowell said after the review is completed of the evaluations and records, the committee could decide which teachers and administrative personnel would be hired, terminated or riffed.

These records and teacher evaluations are personal, and safeguarded by the superintendent. It takes a vote of the school committee to authorize its membership to review the closed documents.

Supt. Crowell suggested that soon a policy be written down so that in the future the committee would simply have to vote on a numbered policy and the school department would have the evaluations prepared for committee review.

Town Meeting...

ment and may peitition the court for modifications including money for legal and technical services to support the action.

Until the modification has been made, sewer commissioners do not have the authority to contract with engineers to prepare a supplemental facilities plan.

Bracken has written to Anne Rogers, assistant attorney general of the Environmental Protection Division. He submitted a report prepared by Joseph Ward, president of Ward Engineering Associates, for the sewer commission. This report is based on the experience of Ward in developing alternate plans for many other communities. "We believe the report sets forth a sound basis for Ward's conclusion that a supplemental study as proposed by the town is likely to lead to a cheaper and faster solution to the town's waste water problems than the Metcalf and Eddy plan.

"The town considers this approach is now required by the federal Environmental Protection Agency regulations," Bracken said.

If the state is not willing to work with the town in solving its waste water problem, the town has instructed Bracken to undertake proceedings in the Suffolk County Superior Court to obtain a modification of the Agreement for Judgement.

After the joint meeting of the sewer commissioners, selectmen, Board of Health and town counsel last week, there were reports that suits might be in the offing to force an Environmental Impact Statement from the EPA.

A suit may also be submitted if Commissioner Joseph Gwinn signs the step 2 grant offer of 1.1 million from the state towards design and construction specifications of a large central sewer plant, estimated to be part of a $12.9 Phase I Metcalf and Eddy plan.

Engineer William Baird of Red Gate Lane, and Jeffrey Bates, environmental attorney for Goodwin, Proctor & Hoar in Boston, and a Cohasset resident, raised the question at the meeting of whether it was proper for the state to offer the grant, when federal regulations specify that a FONZI (a finding of no significant impact) or an environmental impact statement had to be accomplished first.

A FONZI may go into effect after a 30-day period in which the public may file comments. However an EPI may take from six months to over 18 months. An EPI would require full investigation of alternative and innovative solutions according to Bates, such as Ward has proposed.

One or several persons may request an EPI under a "Citizens Suit Notice" to the EPA. A Citizens Suit Notice requires the EPA to make a decision within 60 days as to the necessity of completing an EPI. If they do not reply, the citizens "would be able to go to court to have the EPA do their duty," Bates said.

Bates said that although several interested citizens had approached him after the joint meeting, he has not filed a suit, and knows of no suit filed yet.

Joseph Gwinn, Chairman of the Sewer Commissioners, may sign to accept the grant, without a vote of the other commissioners, since the previous board had already voted to embark on the large central system. However, he has asked town counsel to decide if he can, in view of Article 4.

If Gwinn does, there are also rumors of a suit by Charles DeSantis or other citizens. DeSantis acknowledged Monday, that a suit under those conditions will be considered.

In other business Wednesday, the commissioners voted to send to Town Counsel Richard Henderson a letter from Joseph Gwinn saying: "It is requested you advise the board by April 1, 1983 if the following actions can be taken in view of Article 4 and the Agreement (contract) for Judgement: 1) Accept the offer of the state grant by April 11, 1983 as required by the terms of the offer. 2) Execute the M&E Agreement by May 11, 1983 as required by the terms of the offer. It is also requested that you determine the Town's liability for taking either of these actions prior to the completion of all requirements of Step 1."

Chairman Gwinn told the Mariner, "Town Counsel Richard Henderson says he does not want to answer that letter. He only wants to respond to the motion itself." Gwinn said he was mystified and does not understand this. The letter quoted above is almost the entire motion, except that a reply date has been added.

"I told our secretary to type up the motion and ship it tohim!" Gwinn added.

As town meeting approaches, Commissioner Maxwell Pounder reported Monday night that he has had "diffficulty in getting any answers out of the state the last couple of days. They are afraid of the suits. They say they can't answer anything unless they talk to counsel," he said.

Cohasset's Linsley wins the women's race

Road race draws record crowd

By Alana O'Brien

The Rotary Club's 7th Annual Road Race By-The-Sea was a big success this year, attracting nearly 3,000 spectactors with a record 824 registered runners and about 100 unofficial runners.

Hometown favorite Sarah Linsley won the Women's Open Division for the sixth consecutive year with a time of 33:25.5. A personal best for this race and an outstanding ninth place finish overall.

Sarah flew home from Chicago Saturday especially for the race. Although she runs a lot of races in the Chicago area, she feels a special pride to run in her hometown's road race.

Linsley wore the number one starting position number. Sarah captained the women's track and cross country teams at Harvard before graduating in 1979 and is presently a second year law student at Northwestern University.

She previously placed third in the Bonne Bell Race and captured first place in last fall's Avon 20k Classic Road Race in Chicago.

The Men's Open Division winner and overall winner was Bart Petracca of Dorchester who ran the race in the place of his roommate. Petracca finished the race with an impressive time of 30:03.7, a personal best for him. Petracca ran the race at a pace of 4.83 minutes per mile which is considered a top mile time.

Following Petracca was second place finisher with a time of 30:54.6, Jack Furey of Quincy, and in third place was the Boston Marathon's 1976 winner Jack Fultz from Laconia, N.H. with a time of 31:19.3.

The team race winner was Cohasset Village Sports. Running for the team were Robert Chasen, fourth place; Jeff Mullaley, 46th place and Glenn Carver, 47th place.

In the male under 18 division, Brian Davis of Marshfield placed first. Brian, a freshman at Marshfield High School and a miler on the track team is the son of CHS math teacher Charlie Davis. He finished with a time of 36:29.1 with 32nd place overall.

In the female under 18 division, Kerri D'Angio of Scituate came in first with a time of 45:15.4 and Cohasset's own Katie Clinton placed second with a time of 49:45.6, 390th place. Katie, a senior at CHS, is a distance runner for the track team.

The 6.2 mile race was officially started at 1 p.m. by former Boston Marathon director Will Cloney of Scituate in front of the Unitarian Parish House on the Common. The racers ran down South Main Street, up Elm Street by the Harbor, down Margin Street to Atlantic Ave., over the Cunningham Bridge by Sandy Beach to Jerusalem Road, by Rocky Beach, up Forest Ave., down North Main Street and back to the Common past the finish line in front of the town hall.

Refreshments were served for all participants at St. Stephen's after the race and at 3 p.m. Race Committee Chairman Roy Fitzsimmons awarded the winners of the individual categories.

TOP TEN WINNERS

1. Bart Petracca, Dorchester, MA, 30:03.7; 2. John Furgy, Quincy, MA, 30:54.6; 3. Jack Fultz, Laconia, N.H., 31:19.3; 4. Robert Chasen, Norwell, MA, 31:55.1; 5. Peter Hughes, Canton, MA, 32:12.9; 6. Peter Smith, Sharon, MA, 32:17.7; 7. Paul Hughes, Canton, MA, 32:48.1; 8. Peter Stipe, Newmarket, N.H., 32:72.7; 9. Sarah Linsley, Cohasset, MA, 33:25.5 and 10. Greg Stone, Quincy, MA, 33:30.1.

Local winners finishing in the top 50: 14. J. Bowan, Cohasset, 34:21.8; 26. D. Sides, Scituate, 36:10.3; 32. B. Davis, Marshfield, 36:29.1; 35. C. Hayes, Scituate, 36:44.4; 37. J. Clifford, Scituate, 36:51.7; 40. R. Banks, Scituate, 37:01.1; 44. M. Ellis, Cohasset, 37:L10.9; 49. M. Sacchitella, Scituate, 37:26.7 and 50. C. Zucker, Scituate, 37:31.2.

A conversation with Ex. Secretary Mark Lanza

By Jane Lane

Mark Lanza, 26, Cohasset's new Executive Secretary, feels at home in Cohasset.

He is ambitious, even aggressive, by his own admission. He has structured goals for his life, confident he will meet these personal challenges.

That Mark Lanza is in a perpetual race with himself is a benefit to the town of Cohasset. As the town's newly-appointed executive secretary, Mark is determined to set an example for the government he supervises daily.

By most standards, Mark has acheived a high degree of success. But he would be the first to concede there must be room for improvement in a career for which he has carefully planned.

At 26, Mark says this desire to succeed has been ingrained since childhood. Yet, he has not scaled that ladder of success without a stumble or two. As if life was a conplex puzzle, Mark is attempting to fit together the pieces, and overcome obstacles placed in his path.

He was raised in the Cape Cod community of Wareham. It is a lower-middle class town, as depressed an area as Cohasset is affluent.

The environment that once surrounded him instilled memories of high unemployment, poor housing and substandard education.

"I took a look around and decided very early in my life that this wasn't what I wanted," he says. What he would choose for himself was what he learned from children who would spend summers in Wareham, vacationing from their winter residences in Boston and Wellesley.

His first obstacle to that lifestyle was what he bitterly describes as a below-average education in high school. A much lower percentage of students in Wareham attend college than in Cohasset, he explains.

For that reason, those who want to go onto college have a more difficult time.

"By the time I realized what direction I wanted to go, and that college would be a part of it, I was a product of the educational system there," he said.

"This put me at a disadvantage. Very few kids from Wareham ever attend Ivy League schools. And because of the education I received in high school, and the limited funds I had to support my education, I decided to go to a state college."

His first year at Bridgewater State proved difficult for Lanza who had difficulty verbalizing and writing his thoughts for demanding college professors. One instructor took Mark aside, carefully explained his weaknesses in English, and the deterrent that would remain for him as he advanced in school and career.

Mark realized the challenge that was being placed before him.

"I was determined to improve," he says. Although his grades were poor his first year at Bridgewater, by the time he completed his education, he had an overall A average. He graduated with a degree in political science, with concentrations in public administration and economics.

During college, he began an internship as an assistant to the executive secretary in Sharon. He liked the work so much, he changed his major from pre-law to public administration.

He remained in the intern position for two semesters, and after he graduated the town offered him fulltime employment.

Mark was grateful the town acknowledged his performance, although the salary as an administrative assistant was an unextraordinary $10,000 per year.

One of Mark's more vivid memories was his involvement with developing an Affirmative Action program for the town.

In 1978, this was mandated by the federal government because the town had applied for grant money to develop a park.

It was a period of resistance and turmoil, Mark remembers, but it culminated with the successful completion of a well developed program.

After one and a half years in Sharon, he left when that project, along with a Fair Housing program, were concluded. He realized there was little room for advancement in that town, although he had consumed much knowledge from many experienced persons.

"I was working with a fire chief who had 40 years of experience, and executive secretary who was there for 10 years, a 29-year police chief veteran, and a town clerk who had been there for 29 years. There were a lot of experienced people in that town. I adapted, and I learned from them, and I was accepted," he says.

Mark still has close friends from his earlier days spent in Sharon.

In the fall of 1978, he was accepted into a master's program at Suffolk University for a degree in public administration. He graduated a year and three months later, although he was working full time during the day and simultaneously studying for his real estate broker's license. Mark had learned a thorough knowledge of real estate could be a great asset in his career as a public administrator, working

'Gracious Lady' off to a booming start

By Moira McCarthy

Cohasset residents Beth McAdams and Jimmy Dean took their first ride on the commuter boat "Gracious Lady" Monday, but they plan on taking it often.

"You can beat the traffic and relax for once," McAdams said. "That's a good way to get to work."

"I'll definitely take it again," Dean added.

The boat made its virgin trip last week, and has been experiencing "moderate crowds" since then, according to morning shift captain Steve Lynch of Brant Rock. "We did 1,300 people in the first three days," he said.

"We have a good sized crowd on the 7:15 and 8;15 runs," steward Paul Corbett of Arlington added. "It seems to be building up more and more. We should have a big crowd by the summer."

And everyone in the crowd is enjoying the 25 minute Hingham to Boston commute.

"I love it," Hingham Lawyer Joe Tangusso said. "It saves time, and it's a very restful way to travel."

Irene Murphy drives from Braintree to Hingham to take the 149 passenger boat into town because "it's nicer than the train. It's a more relaxing and different way of going into town."

But not only commuters take advantage of the "Gracious Lady." Graham Taylor of Toronto was in Cohasset visiting friends, and decided to take the commuter boat to see the sights. Ravidan Preston of Washington, D.C. did the same.

The boat is set up much like a wide body airplane, and is complete with stewardesses serving soft drinks, alcohol and snacks.

"Our (the staff)) quality level is incredible," stewardess Susan Jones of Hingham said. "Everyone has previous boat experience, and everyone goes through extensive training sessions, both on and off board." Many of the crew own their own fishing boats, she said, while many are firemen.

The boat currently runs Monday through Friday, morning and afternoon shifts, from Hingham to Boston and back.

But according to Corbett, "We have big plans." Those plans may include a weekend schedule, as well as stops in Cohasset, Scituate and Provincetown.

Some of the first schedule additions may be made in the next few weeks.

Lynch said that the "Gracious Lady's" three propeller, 2,000 horse power engine moves smoothly at 24 knots. "That's a quick, relaxing trip, and the variety breaks up the day," he said.

Tickets for the "Gracious Lady" are $3 and can be purchased at any Jack Conway office or at the Hingham Wharf.

The ship departs Hingham at quarter past the hour every hour starting at 6:15 a.m., ending at 6:15 p.m. There is no run at the noon hour.

"Gracious Lady" departs Boston Aquarium at 6:45 a.m. and every hour after that, except at 12:45 p.m., until 6:45 p.m.

The crew and customers seem to agree, it's worth checking out.

with planning boards and development authorities.

A bout of bad health during this time did not stop Mark from pursuing his ambitions. In 1979, Mark had left Sharon "to advance myself" and was hired as an administrative assistant to the executive secretary and the personnel and budget director in Wayland.

While he worked in Wayland, he was studying and completing his master's program in public administration.

He remembers Wayland as a progressive town. He was assigned to duties involving extensive collective bargaining, and developing job descriptions. He was also the town's wage and salary administrator as well as the Civil Service administrator.

Realizing his career mobility was hampered by the two administrators who were not likely to resign their positions, he climbed further up his career ladder and accepted a job in Yarmouth.

In that bustling Cape Cod town, he was hired as assistant executive secretary. He was grateful for the well-developed job description which succinctly detailed his authorities and duties.

As a young bachelor, Mark loved working in the resort community surrounded by sandy beaches and single girls who vacation there.

Professionally, Mark was designated the town's personnel officer. His most important authority was his involvement in the development of a computer system for the town. His extensive data processing education in college, and his practical experience with a system in Wayland, prepared him well for his duties in Yarmouth.

He describes himself then as "the diplomat in the middle" who negotiated settlements between the computer systems utilized by various department managers and elected officials. When he left the job in January to come to Cohasset, he was confident everyone was pleased with the computer program.

Mark feels strongly his background and education in computers will assist Cohasset in its current attempt to computerize. He hopes his job description will be altered to include a role in the development of town hall's data processing project.

Mark was responsible for helping town accountant William Signorelli get the system's specifications out to bidders, and developing a contract.

More neighboring towns are developing central computer systems, and Mark feels the executive secretary is going to be a meaningful and integral part of the development of the program.

"Someone like me who specializes in computers is in high demand," he says confidently. "It is very difficult for any town to spend a large amount of money for a computer system, in these days of 2½. Towns are trying to get people who specialize in computer. I think that may have been one of the main reasons I was hired here."

Mark, who admittedly is an impatient man with little tolerance for those who do not strive to achieve, is pleased with his position as executive secretary.

He plans to continue in the field of public administration "at least for the next three to four years," but is anxious to begin studying for a degree in law.

Mark says knowledge of law will be a distinct advantage in his employment as a public administrator. Perhaps in the future, a combination administrator-attorney may be a requisite for all supervisors of town government.

Mark likes his job in Cohasset, and is very fond of the town. People have gone out of their way to accept him into this small community. Having been reared in a seaside town, Mark loves living near the ocean. He is an avid scuba diver.

A competitive runner in his high school and college days, Mark was planning to enter the Roadrace-By-The-Sea last Sunday.

Although Mark has continually strived to achieve goals which took him away from his home, his heritage formed a bond from which he will not be separated.

His mother and father instilled in him more than a love of Italian food and a fluency in their native language.

Inbred in Mark is the desire to work diligently and aspire to lofty ambitions. And now the town of Cohasset has the opportunity to benefit from these admirable qualities.

CCC seeks parent aide volunteers

The Coastal Community Counseling Center is seeking volunteers to work as parent aides in a special project. Volunteers who possess the nurturing and supportive skills helpful to families in stress are needed for the development of a local parent aide program. The project has proven to be one of the most effective preventive techniques to child abuse and neglect.

Parent aides are special friends who meet regularly with a parent to provide companionship. A parent aide is there to share, to support, to take the parent shopping or out to lunch. Aides will work with a family for a minimum of one year. Aides should be prepared to listen, maintain phone contact and to visit regularly.

Orientation will be held April 13 from 9-11 a.m. at Memorial Center, 574 Main St., South Weymouth (Rte. 18). A series of six to eight training sessions will be provided at the same time.

Parent aides will get together weekly with experienced supervisors once they start meeting with a family. For more information and an application form, please call Rhonda Meisel at 331-2533.

Sue Sack's creed on cancer: 'You can live with it'

(The following article is about a Marshfield woman, Susan Sack, who has been battling cancer for several years. Because of its universal appeal, the Mariner has reprinted it here: Ed.)

By Lois Martin

"I want women to know you can live with it. You can function. You can do good things even though it's a burden, like diabetes," she said. "I feel people need to know. This is a part of my life, one I certainly would not have selected. But I have continued to do things that have given me great pleasure."

Cancer. Susan Sack has cancer. She's had it four years and has daily launched her own battle against it, struggling to rise to do, to be, in spite of the 'burden.' No one lives harder or more determinedly than a cancer patient like Sue Sack.

And it's a life threatening disease. The reality of that threat is faced on stern terms in the home of Bert "Skip," Sue, and their sons, Brian, David and Scott.

A month or so ago Sue had a showdown with cancer in Beth Israel Hospital. Friends and family thought it would be one from which she wouldn't rise again. But she did. She's home on Christmas Tree Lane.

Her life, her doctor said, won't be the same again, because her lungs are permanently scarred and she has constant need of oxygen.

A new treatment started this week, platinum, a kind of chemotherapy. She's already had one does. It helped her lungs. It is a harsh medicine, one that costs in side effects. But it's her avenue for longer life.

On April 30, 1979, Sue was diagnosed as having breast cancer. She'd found a lump in her left breast, the breast which, according to statistics, is the most commonly afflicted for some reason. She waited to see if it was just part of her cycle, if it would go away. And it did not.

One out of 11 women get breast cancer, even with today's knowledge, research, regularity of physical examinations. They usually find the lumps themselves, as Sue did shortly after a thorough exam.

"I was no candidate for it," she says. "I was in excellent health. I'd just turned 40, lost weight, had no history of it in the family. I'm no smoker, a non drug abuser. I'd nursed three babies (another conceived preventative). And the shock was incredible."

"I determined to do whatever I had to do to save my life for whatever years I had. Scott was three. David was six and Brian was 10. I had to be here for them no matter what. I had to do or to endure as many years as I could. I couldn't leave them motherless."

Skip and Sue researched her options with the doctors. They determined she was in excellent condition and that her chances for survival would be no better with the dreaded mastectomy than by an alternative treatment, radiation.

So the tumor was removed. It was localized, not found elsewhere in her body. The radiation therapy began and doctors put in a radioactive implant at the site where the tumor was removed.

On Sue's kitchen bulletin board by the phone is a list of friends, nearly an inadequate word for her response to their unalterable kindness in four years.

Those women drove her back and forth for treatments, five weeks, each day.

It would take the whole day, by the time she'd drive in, wait, have the treatment, get home again. When she did, she'd rest a bit and then somehow get up, get supper going, keep going herself.

And they talked, the Sacks, they talked a lot, openly about what cancer meant in their lives. Of the sons, Brian, the oldest, understood the most and still does. But he's also the one who bears the greatest burden for that knowledge, the fear of the loss of his mother.

"Skip? Well, he's a fatalist," said his wife. "He believes what will be will be. We have what time we have. He accepted the fact that it's a life threatening disease. We came to grips with it."

And in late 1979 that awareness was bordered by genuine optimism. Her chances for complete recovery were seen as being excellent, about 85 per cent. The tumor was localized. It never spread.

But a year after chemotherapy treatment skin nodules appeared on Sue's chest. It wasn't skin cancer. It was the original tumor manifesting itself on the outside of her body. "I did something nobody else had done. They (the doctors) weren't prepared for it. They had kept the lid on and kept it from spreading but it was still there."

Sue says breast cancer, if unconquered, usually goes from the breast, to the lungs to the bone to the liver.

"But I had felt wonderful at that time. I joined a health club and made grandiose plans for the future. I was getting in the swing of things again and my youngest was off to school so I had a little more time to myself."

Sue Sack

"That was when I saw them, two pimple-like growths on my breast."

Doctors still couldn't find the disease elsewhere in her body but there it was, semblances from the original tumor, still there.

"They decided," said Sue, "the only way to rid me of the problem was to remove the breast, which is what they did. And it was agonizing because I'd spent one full year saving that breast."

It was removed Nov. 15, 1980.

"The Sunday before that I planted tulips. Skip had bought me magnificent tulips. I was praying as I planted each one. I asked God to let me see them in the spring."

Sue says the assurance of recovery she'd found in '79 was diminished in late 1980.

"I came through the surgery beautifully. My skin healed and with all that radiation it shouldn't have healed. I said to my doctor, 'That's my good old vitamins I've been taking for five years that you've been poopooing'."

But the breast that had been removed as a resolution to the cancer was found to be clear of the disease. It was clean, a healthy breast, nothing there..."They took a healthy breast."

Then where was the disease?

"It was in the mammary nodes inside the wall of the breast not within the breast itself," she said.

Six weeks after the surgery there were still the little growths on the chest wall. Those growths have been the prevalent, prevailing signal of the disease ever since. "They come and they go and they dry," said Sue. "But they don't go away."

So the chemotherapy continued as needed. But because of the type of skin and veins she has, the harsh drugs began to destroy and scar the veins. And after three years doctors had a serious problem trying to treat the disease. "I have had IV's so long as I can tolerate the drug. I never looked debilitated. I had bloating from the drugs, retention of fluid."

But Sue Sack also retained routine activities that told her she was still a Marshfield resident who attended school meetings, supported candidates, organized fundraisers.

"You see, I didn't allow myself to become the cancer. That's what happens. In counseling a woman said 'Don't allow yourself to become the disease.' It's

'The Atomic Cafe' debunks theory of duck and cover

By Moira McCarthy

Duck and cover!

Those words which meant so much in the 50's, but so little today, were traced and dissected in the Scituate Peace Coalition's presentation of "The Atomic Cafe" at the Queen Anne Cinema, March 27.

The film traced the propaganda surrounding the development of the hydrogen and atom bombs by putting together news clips and military films used to "educate" the public.

And the effect was amazing, for those who grew up in the 50's and those who didn't.

" 'The Atomic Cafe' was hard for me to react to, being from the generation the propaganda was aimed at," Scituate resident Mary O'Connor said. "We used to duck and cover every day."

Joe Burke of the Pilgrim Fellowship at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church said, "to believe that we thought (things like ducking and covering) would save our lives is crazy."

Burke brought along a group of high school students so they could "get an idea of things they haven't seen before. If we go into war now, we have to go in it with our eyes open. It's funny how (the propaganda) is laughable today," he said.

Though the film is a serious analysis of what was a serious situation, the actions of the government and the military at the time seemed silly to the audience.

President Truman speaks of the A-Bomb as "God's work," and army films depict nuclear war as a calm scene where a family hops into their "personal bomb shelter," waits one or two minutes, and then emerges to fix a few broken windows and straighten the pictures on the walls.

Scituate High School sophomore Kelly Mason was "surprised. It's amazing what people believed," she said. "They'd watch those film clips and then say 'Oh, everything's all right.' "

In general, the audience's attitude was that people were fooled by propaganda back then, and so they need to be wary of it today.

Sue Sack's creed on cancer. 'You can live with it'...

a chronic illness, no different from diabetes, multiple sclerosis. As long as you can get through the day. It's in your head but you can't let it stay there and overwhelm you. Go about your business. I performed as a mother, as a friend, any way I could. It gave me pleasure," said Sue Sack.

"People used to seem to say, 'She's out. Look at her. She's walking around and she's not green, nor funny-colored."

"You can live with this disease."

But in the living with it, Sue Sack has met people who cannot, people who don't have cancer but are afraid of those who do.

"It's sad," she says. "People can't accept this thing. I saw friends recently when I had my portable tank (oxygen) and they backed away from me. It hurt me terribly. Some are unable to deal with anything slightly aside from the norm."

Cancer affects a lot of people, she says. Everyone has to learn to deal with it because it's there.

She kept her household as normal as possible. Hers is a fine home. The kitchen has a skylight, a window that houses her plants, a sense of a going-ahead as usual like every other family.

"Life went on, Thank God," said Sue. "Because of that my kids have done very well. I get lovely notes from teachers who tell me how they're doing."

But it hasn't been easy on them, the threat of a mother's loss. Dealing with it has not masked the impact of the disease on all of them.

The Sacks are Jewish. They, along with other residents of that faith, attend Temple in Hingham. And last Sept. 13, Brian's Bar Mitzvah was accomplished, "The happiest, proudest day of my life," said his mother.

She said she told Skip just last week if any thing happens to her, please make sure the other boys have the Bar Mitzvah, see to it.

Her veins collapsed partially in late September 1981. So she switched to oral medication. That new drug recalled all the radiation therapy symptoms, bringing about inflammation in the lungs. Fluid built up. She had difficulty breathing.

The ultimate result was that in December she was hospitalized in "BI" (Beth Israel Hospital) all during the holidays. It was rough on her, on her family, on her friends having her sick then. But that absence was not so great as were their fears, that Sue Sack had found her final illness.

"I thought I was gone. Skip did too. We talked about it last night. He thought he'd be making 'arrangements,' " she says.

But Sue Sack came through the staggering illness. Her lungs were drained of liters of fluid. She was given oxygen to assist her in every move. There's a main unit in the house. She keeps it on '5' during up and around times and lowers it to '3' when she sleeps. Her portable tank is there if she needs it. Her lungs are permanently damaged from radiation. And the doctors say she has floating tumor cells. The planned platinum treatments are supposed to take care of those.

When Sue came home earlier this year she ran headlong into the care of Deborah Flitter. "The best in nursing and the best in humanity," said the patient.

Under Deborah's administration Sue regained a level of health in nutrition, getting bodily functions under control, reducing blood pressure. She'd lost 30 pounds since the December illness, that 'bloat' she'd talked about.

What does her doctor say now, her main one though she's had a slew of them in four years. "The doctor and I have an open, honest relationship," said Sue. "He never pulls his punches. He said, 'The ballgame isn't over. You're not in the final innings yet. When you are, I'll let you know. But you'll never be the same person you were. You're not going to breeze around like you used to.' "

The hardest part of that is that Sue Sack loves being the primary person in the doing for her family, the meals, the laundry, the buzzing about. She's trying to accept the fact that she can't do those things as surely as she could not do them if she'd been crippled and confined to a wheelchair.

The platinum chemotherapy will be done every three weeks. It's powerful, toxic.

She will lose all her hair.

"No one in this world is as vain or as hair-conscious as I am," she said. "Since I was a little girl I've had thick auburn hair. People would run their hands through it or yank it when it was in pigtails. The loss of hair is most degrading. You know in olden days they shaved women's heads to punish them."

"They don't know if it will come back, when, what color, curly or straight.

"But my lungs improved after the first treatment."

What inning is Sue Sack in now?

"I don't know what inning I'm in, I really don't. I can't fathom its being over. If it does come, I'd like it to be quick. I don't want to suffer. Many Marshfield women have died from cancer. I've lived through that and I've hoped and I've been burdened when they didn't live. When Louise Gallagher died, I spent a week crying my eyes out. And Sue Emerson...we all had such hope. The statistics were telling us great strides were being made. Our attitudes were right. We had so much to live for. Old people could give up. We didn't.

"The first week I was in the hospital I said, 'God, I don't know what it is you want from me or why this is happening to me. I love life passionately. I really want to be here.' "

She is. There is in the Sacks' home, a flow of living that has had to be altered somewhat because the mother/wife has cancer. There is also that shield, that sense of protection that follows the life line of the oxygen tube.

But also there is strength in the struggle, hard to find some days or moments but it has been there and it is there now, for today and for the future.

David, she says, comes home from school and asks her if she's feeling better because she's looking better and can he get her anything.

Scott comes in, hurls his papers and himself on her bed and tells her she's the most wonderful, beautiful mother in the world.

Brian comes in and says, "Hi, Mom...any mail, Mom." And it is he who quietly assists, without comment, who cooked when she was hospitalized..."He loves me so much," said his mother.

And that love empowers, gives purpose. Now it's on to the platinum, something that can make you sick, make you lose your hair, and make you feel better, though you may never be as good as you were before... Something that lets you see the tulips in the spring.

Bus fence denied

Acting chairman Jack Langmaid said because the school department owns several "old buses" and there is no available school department vehicle maintenance personnel, the school department will not spend money to construct a fence to surround the school buses. He said the department does not have a suitable piece of property where the buses could be stored. He said the buses will continue to be stored on a lot on Route 3A owned by mechanic Charles Pape.

Rec Department to hold Easter egg hunt, April 2

Saturday, April 2, the Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct an Easter Egg Hunt for children ages 3 to 11, at the Deer Hill School field, at 11 a.m.

The Recreation Department, in conjunction with the Cohasset Rotary Club and American Legion, George Mealey Post #118, will sponsor the program.

Children will be divided into three groups accordingly: 3-5 years old, 6-8 years old and 9-11 years old.

Parents should accompany younger children.

Each child will receive candy, and a prize will be awarded to those children finding eggs with a special number.

Rain date will be Saturday, April 9, at 11 a.m.

LIGHT CORNER by Nancy Dooley

Stained glass light fixtures are a hot "new" item done in an old style, commonly called Tiffany lamps. They are styled after the originals of the master, Louis Tiffany. Many hours of hard work and painstaking care are put into the building of one fixture. First the stained glass is cut into pieces according to the specified pattern. Then each piece is hand wrapped in copper foil around the edge securing a strong surface for the soldering of the pieces in place. Then a copper plating is added for a final touch of elegance. The ultimate joining of the glass pieces into a finished product is done with exquisite skill and care by stained glass artists. All our stained glass tiffany lamps are high quality, American made pieces by Hartford of Conn. and Stanford Art Glass of Colorado. Stop in and see the splendor of color from our "tiffany tree" and choose your lamp at Flagstaff Lighting Showroom, NORTH RIVER ELECTRIC SUPPLY, 433 Washington St., Norwell. OPEN 9-5 Mon-Sat 9-9 Thurs. We take MC and Visa. Call us at 659-2272 or 749-5524. We will be closed Friday, April 1 and Saturday April 2.

Historical Society dinner draws a good crowd

By David Wadsworth

The Cohasset Historical Society's March 16 dinner meeting held at Trueblood Hall was attended by nearly 130 people.

The guest speaker for the evening was Robert Thorndike of Scituate, who presented an illustrated lecture on the history of Scituate's Glades and Strawberry Point. That promentory, forming part of the approaches to Cohasset Harbor, often is seen by Cohasset residents but seldom visited.

Its unique history proved to be a fascinating subject. Thorndike talked about the evolution of the Glades from 18th century farmland to a 19th century hotel complex and its transformation to a 20th century residence for a group of prominent Boston families who still spend the summer months along its wind and wave-swept shores.

The earliest records of the Glades show it to have been occupied by a number of large 18th century farms, one of which once changed hands for $50.

During the mid-1800's, the shoreline of Cohasset and Scituate became the site of numerous large hotels, and the Glades was no exception. In 1847 the original Glades hotel was constructed. That early building still stands, a relic of a long gone era of gracious living.

But the Glades was difficult to reach in those days, and far from the new railroad lines. After some years of difficulty, the hotel was sold to a group of Boston families including names such as Adams and Saltonstall. The same isolation which had constrained the hotel business proved to be just what these urban-dwelling families wanted, and each summer they moved to this delightful seashore for weeks of sailing, swimming and relaxation.

The Glades remained a summer colony until World War II, when the United States Armed Forces set up housekeeping, complete with a large coast defense gun and equipped with that modern miracle of electronics, radar.

Today's highly visible watchtower at the Glades began as a Navy observation tower, and several of the small buildings only appear to be summer cottages. Beneath their clapboard and frame exterior are pillbox-like structures made of solid concrete. Even the windows are part of a "false front" intended to deceive enemy submariners. The buildings, with hidden windows constructed to resemble shadows cast by the sun, served as observation posts from which military personnel could watch the coming and going of aircraft and vessels at the outer approaches to Boston Harbor.

The expertise of small talk

By Lois Martin

There's probably a knack to small talk but I've never had it. I like big talk better. In fact, I don't know too many people who are accomplished small talkers. But I admit I've never hung around them long enough to measure ability objectively.

Our society is clotted with social situations in which small talk is the order of the day. Small talk is different from "shooting the breeze," "passing the time of day," "chatting."

It's a responsibility, one that I don't want and don't handle particularly well.

There are rules that go with small talking and there's a fine edge there that makes the unwilling participant s em rude. I believe I've done that.

Take your cocktail party, for example, the kind where the men congregate in the kitchen and the women drift in and out of the living room. Drifting's the rule in small talking. You don't drift you aren't a friendly person.

Women clutch their purses under one upper arm and hold onto their glass with one hand, securing the cocktail napkin beneath it with the other. Then you slide up to a small cluster of people who are obviously small talking. And you join them. They'll have to let you in. If they are big talking, you're intruding. You're the lout and they don't have to let a lout in on big talk.

Opening remarks in small talk may be: How ARE you! (Someone who appears to be agog at seeing you). "How's it going?" (This is from someone you just saw in the drug store when you were both getting an antacid). "Where have you been keeping yourself?" (That person and you have wittingly avoided one another and are only sorry that has been interrupted).

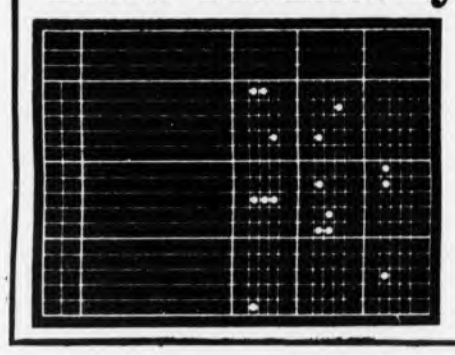
I don't thrive on major cocktail parties if they are serious events, like when something is supposed to be accomplished, a business debt or a social obligation, or an annual event to which the hostess feels beholden.

I don't drift. I find myself a chair. There aren't many of those and you may have to watch for someone to announce a trip to the ladies room to get one. But it's worth the wait. I seat myself near the good nuts. If they're at an inconvenient reach, I take them with me. And from there I observe unless or until someone who's weary of small talk approaches.

Then I enjoy the big talk. I fancy the meat and the merit of conversations and you have to wait till the filibuster in the dining room is over before you can catch others in a similar mood.

If there's one good thing about an elevator ride with strangers, it's the unbroken silence. There are places when talk of any kind is frowned on and that's one of them. Stare straight forward, watch the door together, step aside for someone who's getting off on 3. Murmur politely if necessary but no more.

Same in a doctor's office, especially if it's a gyn/ob session. Women would rather choke to death than talk in natural tones. Anything other than muted conversation among pregnant women is shocking in a doctor's office.



In supermarket aisles, there's a smattering of small talk. But there's a ton of big talk, 45 minutes worth I saw one day. Groceries inspire deep conversations. You get yourself to the side of the dietetic food, not the cereal aisle or the spaghetti one because there's too much traffic. Near dietitic peanut butter you can delve into issues.

There are people with whom a bit of superficial conversation is a must, your mailman, the paper boy. Fortunately joggers only have time for the opening line to small talk before they've gone by.

Trouble is failure to talk small makes a person seem disinterested. Find out how old their kids are now. ("It doesn't seem possible.") Or where they've come from. ("Did you ever meet Thurston Peabody? He was from Minnesota, too.)...or perhaps one of the more modern phrases, "Do you work at home or outside the home?" (If that's confusing just say, "Thank you." That's always polite and requires no explanation or further small talk.)

The first time we hit 60, you leave town!

Living in the country is even better than it used to be. Lots of new comforts have been added—as you'll soon see when you visit The Meadows in Hingham.

This fine group of attached single family homes offers the spaciousness and fine construction of yesteryear with conveniences grandma never even contemplated. There are kitchens with sunny breakfast bays . . . lots of fireplaces . . . vaulted and tray ceilings . . . large private courtyards . . . 2-car garages . . . swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. The location, on wildflower-strewn meadows in the lovely town of Hingham, is idyllic.

Two and three bedroom homes range from $155,000 to $210,000 during our opening period. The furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take Exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment.

Philip Dormitzer reports from Pakistan

Philip Dormitzer, a Harvard sophomore and 1981 graduate of Cohasset High School, is on a "dig" in Pakistan with members of the Harvard Anthropology Department. He arrived in Rawalpindi, Pakistan, after a stopover in Karachi, Feb. 2 and began his field work a few days later in Chingi. When the expedition ends March 20, he plans to travel in Pakistan and India for a few weeks.

His letters home describe his impressions of this "other side of the earth" — a completely different culture and environment from anything he had experienced before.

Here is his letter dated Feb. 5:

I have arrived safely in Rawalpindi! Pakistan is indeed part of the third world. The squalor of the city cannot compare with anything I have seen in the U.S. or Europe. It appears that all the buildings were erected in a decrepit condition and deteriorated from there.

When we arrived in Karachi we discovered that the terminal had been torn down and we were processed under a scaffolding and corrugated tin shelter. To get to the street we pushed our way through a crowd of "teeming mass," and our luggage was grabbed and shoved aboard a bus bound for the domestic terminal by boys who protested that they "did not want to take our money."

Of course, they immediately demanded payment for their services, whereupon an argument started between one of the boys and an old man who seemed to be supervising them. This was concluded when the old man attempted to beat the boy with a bamboo club. (Picture all this happening at 3 a.m. in front of the ruins of an airport terminal.)

Despite this, you can walk almost anywhere with essentially no threat of personal danger. This can be explained by the fact that the punishment for attempted theft is amputation of the hands.

This is truly a military dictatorship. (We arrived concurrently with the F-16s.) Soldiers are everywhere. The Rawalpindi airport is also a military base, and soldiers drilled in front of the terminal as we landed. Many civilians also carry weapons. In fact, the authorities tend to be armed with clubs, not guns.

The food here is very good and very inexpensive. The project is supplying us with comfortable rooms while we register with the police and clear up other details in the city. The Hotel Silver Grille is quite nice (comparatively) on the inside, but on its exterior, facing the street, is a sign that points into an alley-way between ramshackled buildings. This alley is patroled by a beggarwoman who, for the past five years, has always been supplied with an infant to support her claims. This infant never seems to age.

On the flight to Rawalpindi we passed over the field area. It looks (from the air) like an unbelievable place. In the middle of wild badlands are little mud compounds. I've been told that they have not changed since the time of Alexander the Great. Next to the compounds are terraced fields. The badlands themselves seem incredibly rugged — full of outcrops, cliffs and canyons.

I hope that I have not given too dismal a picture of the city. It's a confusing place and takes getting used to. It seems impossible that the people (who are everywhere) can survive.

The scene on the street is fascinating. We are located in an alley off the Grand Trunk Road which leads from Lahore to 'Pindi to Kabul and finally to Europe. It is filled with cabs (on the left side), oxcarts, horses, bicycles, buses and people. The distinction between a set-up shop and a spread of goods along the ground is muddled. There are vendors selling fruit, mounds of nuts, stuffed mongooses, snakes and falcons, jewels, books, etc. Buses go by with people hanging out of the doors. Oxcarts haul peasants perched on top of sacks of grain. The dress is varied. Some wear bluejeans, some business suits, many have pajama-like garments, and a great number are wrapped in blankets, shawls and turbans.

One has to keep track of a number of weekly and daily sanctions. Friday is the Sabbath, and it's tough to get any work done. Tuesday and Wednesday are meatless days. And for two hours a day Rawalpindi goes on an electricity fast and the power shuts down.

When I mail this letter I will have to make sure that I witness the cancellation of the stamp — or else the postal employees steal the stamp and sell it. In our room we are given "drinking" water in a thermos. As it turns out, this is muddy and more polluted than the tap water. Our shower has two spigots. One is labeled cold. The other is also labeled cold. Bathing is a bracing experience.

Despite this it is very exciting to be here. It really does feel like the other side of the earth. I will try to write about once a week, but don't be upset if the letters don't arrive exactly on time. Some may not show up at all.

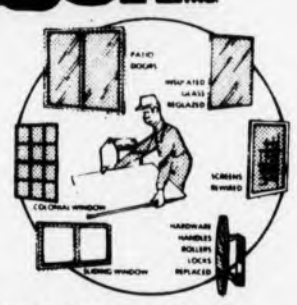
Fire lines . . .

State Fire Marshal Joseph O'Keefe again issued a warning that the 1970 model FE18UL foam fire extinguisher manufactured by the BernzOmatic Corporation of Medina, N.Y., may rupture. The "BernzOmatic Foam Fire Extinguisher" model FE18UL was manufactured in 1970 and sold at retail during 1970 and 1972.

The solution in the 1970 extinguisher may cause corrosion to the tank, which with age increases the likelihood of rupture and possible injury. The solution formula in subsequent manufacturing years was changed.



The recalled extinguishers are red with "BernzOmatic Foam Fire Extinguisher" in white letters. They measure approximately 7½ inches in length and 2 7/8 inches in diameter. Only those extinguishers with "Model FE18UL" appearing in the center of the back label and the date "1979" in the upper left-hand corner are affected. It is believed that a substantial number of these fire extinguishers may still be in consumers' homes.

Fire Marshal O'Keefe strongly urges anyone possessing this model fire extinguisher to immediately discharge its contents. Inquiries should be addressed to BernzOmatic, Olney Street, Medina, New York 14103.

Open burning will be conducted through May 1. Permission to conduct burning may be obtained by calling Cohasset Fire Headquarters at 383-0260 on the day burning is to be conducted.

Residents are reminded burning of leaves, grass, hay and stumps is not permitted. Burning shall be conducted from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling.

Permission to burn may be cancelled at any time due adverse weather conditions. Questions regarding open burning may be answered by calling the Fire Department.

First place winner Bart Petracca of Dorchester, substituting for his roommate, ran at a pace of 4.83 minutes per miler.

The hometown favorite, Sarah Linsley of Cohasset, flew in from Chicago to finish first in the women's division and ninth overall. Her time was her personal best for the Cohasset race.

Easter comes early this year — next Sunday, in fact — and when the Easter Bunny comes your way, make sure he leaves behind a little treasure of a cookbook called "A Norwell Sampler." Its plastic cover and inside pages prettily designed by Barbara Sesnewicz, it's a joint offering of recipes from members of the Norwell Newcomers Club and The Woman's Club of Norwell. Pat Miller and Cherie Nixon were co-chairmen of the committee which last fall began the tremendous task of readying the 154-page book. Look for such welcome additions to your recipe files as this one which would be great with your Easter ham! Here is Nancy Poor's

CURRIED FRUIT

1 med. can each of pears, peaches, pineapple and apricots. Drain juices from fruit, cut into bite-size chunks. Mix the following with fruit and bake at 350 degrees for 30 min.:
1/4 c. butter, melted
2 tsp. curry powder
1 c. brown sugar

* * *

Planning a holiday meal often finds us leafing through cookbooks to get ideas for a festive meal, so if you don't want to wait for the Easter Bunny to deliver, there are ways of treating yourself to a copy of the "Norwell Sampler." Call Pat or Cherie at their Norwell home, or Lois Sinatra at 659-7207. Any of the club members will be glad to help you, I'm sure, but just in case you're busy with Easter plans and don't get your order in, here's Merc Evans' recipe for

SPINACH ORANGE SALAD

1 lb. fresh spinach
Lettuce
2 lge. oranges, pared and sliced
1/2 red onion, sliced
1 large avocado
Choice of dressing

Wash and dry spinach and lettuce. Tear into bite-size pieces. Peel avocado and slice into bowl, add onion. Just before serving add enough salad dressing to coat the greens. Top with walnut croutons.

WALNUT CROUTONS

1½ T butter
1/4 tsp. salt
1/3 c. walnuts
1 c. croutons

Melt butter in skillet, add salt, walnuts and croutons. Stir constantly over medium heat until coated. Serves 6-8.

* * *

The more tempting I find a new cookbook, the harder it is to select a few recipes to feature in this column. This particular book has a few novel offerings such as Grandmother's Favorites, Potpourri and recipes from the chefs of some of our best restaurants. It's not easy selecting a recipe when you have to choose among such dishes as Jane Donovan's Cabbage and Beef Soup, Pat Miller's Sticky Buns, Phyllis Hawk's Chicken Ignolia, Lois Sinatra's Shrimp and Artichoke Hearts Casserole, Robin Deininger's Mussell Casserole, Carol Ann Mosel's Layered Spinach Supreme, Christine Kelly's English Trifle and Barbara Hamer's

CHOCOLATE NUMMIES

4 sq. unsweetened chocolate
1 can condensed milk, not evaporated
1 tsp. vanilla
1/2 c. chopped nuts: pecans, almonds, or walnuts and extra for the tops

Preheat oven to 350. Melt chocolate in double boiler; add condensed milk, stirring constantly. Add vanilla and chopped nuts. When cooked enough to hold its shape (6 to 10 min.), drop by spoonfuls onto buttered baking sheets. Put extra nuts on top. Place on second baking sheet to prevent burning. Bake 10 min. Yield: 15 to 18.

Some families find a brunch makes for a pleasant Easter observance and the trick is to make preparations ahead of time which is exactly what you can do with Pat Miller's

STICKY BUNS

1 loaf frozen bread, thawed
1/4 c. margarine
1/2 c. brown sugar
1 sm. pkg. vanilla pudding, not instant
1 T milk
Cinnamon to taste
Nuts to taste

Break bread into bite-size pieces and put in greased 8" pan. Melt butter or margarine, add brown sugar, pudding, milk, cinnamon and nuts. Mix and pour over broken bread. Let rise 2½ to 3 hours or overnight in refrigerator, covered. Bake at 350 for 30 min. Turn out onto plate while hot.

PRIVATE GIFT EXPANDS SERVICE

A gift of $200 from an anonymous Cohasset donor to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library has permitted expansion of a popular children's service.

The donor discussed the library's needs with the staff, and made the gift "to fund salary and expenses for an additonal series of preschool story hours."

The donor, a parent, said, "Reading is a lifetime gift and you and your staff should be congratulated for organizing this terrific program."

The donor hopes this gift "might be a stimulus to other private sources to support worthwhile public programs whose funding has been drasitcally curtailed."

Children's Librarian JoAnn Mitchell has organized another training program for volunteer storytellers, and has begun another eight week series of story hours.

NANTASKET LIBRARY FUNDS DENIED

Library trustees will not be paying the usual $2,000 appropriated for the Nantasket Library. Hull and Hingham will not be paying operating expenses for the library either. An independent board of trustees for the library is exploring closing the library.

MEMBERSHIP DECLINE

Lucille McLoughlin, Friends of the Library president commented to the library trustees board about the decline of group membership. Dues paying members totaled 150, down 50 from last year. The Friends annually support museum passes, purchases of library books, special equipment and items not in the town library budget. The Friends will soon be planning a membership drive.

LIBRARIAN'S TRAVEL FUND

An anonymous member of the Friends of the Library has made a special $100 donation to the librarian's travel fund to pay for Director Richard Hayes to attend a Public Library Association Conference in Baltimore, Maryland later in March.

MUSEUM PASSES

The Friends of the Library have purchased paid memberships to the Children's Museum, Museum of Fine Arts, Museum of Science and the Aquarium. The passes cost $1,335 and Cohasset residents can use the free passes during the year. Residents must call the library to reserve the pass for the day needed.

PAY EQUITY REQUESTED

The trustees of the library have asked the personnel committee to restore equity in pay among all town employees. The issue is that different bargaining units are negotiating with different town boards, and as a result, there are different wage settlements without response to equal pay for equal work.

STAIR REPAIR

The advisory board agreed to a $777 transfer to pay for worn out carpet on the library's children's room stairway. The stariway has been recarpeted by Town and Country Carpet of Cohasset.

BOOK AUCTION

The library staff has spent several weeks preparing mailing lists of several hundred book dealers, university libraries and music books. In a related matter, selectmen are expected to approve donations of discarded library books of negligible value to the Friends of the Library Book Sale May 20 and 21.

SUMMER READING

The library trustees have asked the Friends of the Library for $200 towards free paperback books for children who complete the requirements of the summer reading program. Last year 100 children read 20 or more books.

Arts Council applications

The Cohasset Arts Council announces that grant applications may be obtained at the selectmen's office at Town Hall. Cohasset's share of funds made available by the Mass. Arts Lottery Council is $582.

Applications should be returned to the selectmen's office no later than April 15 at which time they will be reviewed.

Emission testing to start

Massachusetts begins inspecting automobile emissions levels April 1. A free brochure, outlining the new inspection program, is available through the ALA Auto and Travel Club.

Published in cooperation with the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, this booklet explains which vehicles must be inspected and when, how the actual inspection is conducted and what your obligations and protections are under the Inspection Maintenance, or "IM" program.

To obtain a free copy, send a self-addressed, stamped, business size envelope to: The ALA Auto & Travel Club, Inspection Maintenance Program, P.O. Box 400, Wellesley, 02181.

At the South Shore Art Center...

CALLIGRAPHY

Calligraphy, a South Shore Art Center spring offering, will be taught only once this year.

Meeting Mondays, beginning April 14 from 7:30 to 10 p.m., the course offers an opportunity to learn how to make beautiful letters for use on signs, cards, invitation or as an art form. Classes will meet at the Center, 103 Ripley Road.

Instructor Bill Bell, an award winning calligrapher and Hanover Public Schools teacher, will emphasize individual stroke exercises to make a structurally sound character and the aesthetic potential of the art.

Advance registration is required.

CLAY CLASS

The Center's children's clay class scheduled to begin Monday, March 28 is postponed one week to Monday, April 4.

The class will meet from 3:30 to 5 p.m. and is open to children ages six to 12.

Taught by Syma, the children will learn handbuilding methods for pottery and clay sculpture. Pieces will be fired and then decorated with paints, stain and glitter.

Enrollments are still being accepted for this course.

Lisbeth Wyman is teaching an art workshop for children ages six to eight beginning March 31 from 3:30 to 5 p.m. and Serena Brundige is teaching the art workshop II for ages nine to 12 beginning March 30 from 3:30 to 5 p.m.

For additional information and to enroll call the Center at 383-9548.

DECORATIVE ARTS

A three-part mini series on decorative arts will focus on using antiques, Oriental rugs and prints in a residential or professional setting.

This series, scheduled for Mondays, April 4, 11 and 25, will give participants guidelines in selecting and working with antiques and other collectibles, purchasing and using Oriental rugs and using prints effectively.

South Shore decorator Philip Smith will talk about antiques and collectibles April 4 at 8 p.m.; Oriental rug expert Leo Boodakian, April 11 at 8 p.m., will give a slide presentation; and artist and printmaker Berj Kailian, April 25 at 8 p.m., will discuss the purchase and use of prints in the home. Advance registration is required for the series or any one particular evening.

SCHOOL CHILDREN EXHIBIT

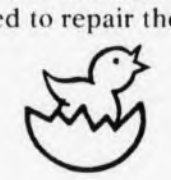
The South Shore Art Center opens its gallery for an exhibit of work by Scituate school children in Kindergarten through grade 12.

"Young Artists of Scituate" will open April 7 through April 30. A formal reception will be held Sunday, April 10 from 3 to 5 p.m.

This exhibit gives school students a chance to show what they have been doing during the school year. Art Department Head Kathy Frazee will work with teachers and students to collect and hang the art and provide the punch and cookies for the opening.

Past exhibits by school children have included Hingham, Cohasset and Norwell public schools.

The public is welcome to view the work Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m. and Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.



PRINTMAKING

Art Center spring classes scheduled to begin Monday, April 4 are Bill Bell's calligraphy, Paul Fortin's intermediate photography, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. and beginning Tuesday, April 5, Albert Abany's printmaking, from 7:15 to 10:15 p.m.

Asbestos deadline

All public schools must certify that they contain safe levels of detectible asbestos by June 28. School Supt. Eugene Crowell said according to federal rules, if the school dept. acknowledges there is asbestos in schools that is controlled and safe, and if the department notifies all school employees and unions, the school dept. is exempt from testing each room three times for asbestos at $25 per test.

A proposed legislative bill calls for state aid of $15 million for asbestos covering and removal. But in the town of Ayer's case, it has been estimated over $1 million will be needed to repair the asbestos problem.

DON'T TRY TO KEEP UP WITH THE JONESES. PASS THEM.

Following trends is easy.
Setting them, however, takes a little more imagination. The kind of sixth sense that can appreciate innovation before it becomes fashionable.
Case in point: the Saab 900 Turbo. For some time, car mavens have admired its exhilarating power and performance (not to mention more mundane features like room and economy and comfort). More recently, even publications like The New York Times have seen fit to print its praises. Which may explain why now the Saab Turbo is increasingly seen pulling into the more elegant driveways of America.
Even the Joneses are starting to take notice.
But given the Saab Turbo's acceleration of 0-60 in 9.6 seconds, they'll have a pretty tough time keeping up.

Satuit Bowlaway report . . .

By Don Dwyer

Sunday Nights Get Together Girls League reports that the Seven-Ups are leading all with 52 wins and 28 losses, two points ahead of the Moxies. The winning team consists of Martha Rouleau, Kathy Carbo, Ellen McNeil, and Stephanie Gleason. (This is first year bowling in league competition. Not bad for these young rookies.) Individual class leaders are, Class A Jean Petkus, 105.7; Class B, Brenda Litchfield, 93.8; and Class C, Leslie Roberts, 86.3. (Cash money goes to all class winners.) Linda Pattison and Diane Peters are tied for the monthly over the average money with a plus 53 each. Delores Jenkins has the High Three with a super 377 and Cindy Hazen the High Single with a neat 161. (These Sunday Nighters are something else.)

Friday afternoons Norfolk Conveyor League has the Eagles leading by five points over the Giants with a real race seen right to the last day. Individual class average leaders are: Jim Nagle, "A" leader with an outstanding 109.3; Delores Jenkins has the "B" leadership with an excellent 101.7; and Ben Capone has the "C" Division captured leading with a 91.7. Jim Nagle has both High Single, 164; and High Three, 382, to lead all the men. Delores Jenkins' High Single, 152; and High Three, 366, leads all the gals in that department. (Pretty fair bowling from all, I would say.) Team High Three belong to the Eagles with 1,605 and the Giants have team Single with 589.

Thursday Mornings Coffee and Donut League has the Sankas still in first place six points ahead of the Jellies and moving closer, (could be another close finish, we see), the High Average department, as we said last time, is really something with two bowlers, Priscilla Sindone, and Marie Merritt exactly tied with 98.7. (Haven't seen anything like that in years.) Last week's highlights had Millie Lidington score a double strike. (Just super, Millie). And Rosalie Bulu the High Single of 116. Terry Smith continues her good bowling rolling the High Three with 302.

Tuesday Mornings Ivy League has a new team leader with the Sapphires taken over the leadership with 51 wins and 34 losses, two points ahead of the Diamonds and three points in front of the Rubys. (A sure close race in the making.) Pat Torrey leads all in Class A, continuing her super bowling with a 109.6. Class B has Beverly Lembo in front with 100.5. Sally Leate has Class C leadership with a 95.4, and Class D's leader is Dottie Sunnerberg with 90.1. The league's High Single is held by Pat Torrey rolling a 156, and Kip Ahearn the High Three with 391. (These look like T.V. scores to me.) Last week's great highlights came from Pat Torrey who was High with 362, followed by Karen Mitton and Helen Hatch with 336 each. Sandy Hartley rolled 329, and Peg Barton and Betty Madden had 319. Charlene Ketterer was next with 315, followed by Linda Zimmer and Lois Babbitt with 314. Sally Leate had a 303 and Shirley Davis' 300 rounded out the High Totals for the week. Dorothy Moran still has the only triple for the season. (Dot should get something special, I would say.)

Thursday Night's Scituate Merchant's Mens League have the following leaders in their divisions: Finnie Sales and Service, Satuit Bowlaway, Sea-Coast Deli, and Scituate Concrete Pipe are holding their spots for the big money prizes. The following men are leading their classes for High Averages: A, Joe Ganem, 124.7; B, Don Oppenheim, 116.2; C, Ken Evans, 112.0; D, Mark Patterson, 110.0, E, 105.9; F, Chet Sunnerberg with 103.9; and G, Nick Sinopoli with a 100.5. (From the looks of these great averages, they all should be on T.V.) Other individual scores are the following: Joe Ganem has the High Three of 439; Ken Evans, 429; Kevin Cochran, 427; Jr. Torrey and Dan Durant, 423; Don Oppenheim, 422; Don Quinn, 421; Charlie Thayer, 414; Howie Phillips, 411; and Joe Slater, 410. (Four hundred is nothing to this league; I never saw so many in one year.) High Singles have Dan Durant with 183; Kevin Cochran, 179; Ian McCorkell, 172; Ken Evans and Phil Spear, 165; Phil Rose, 164; Dan O'Connell and Ken McNeil with 160 each. (Scores galore at the Satuit Bowlaway.)

Visit us soon at the Bowlaway. Open bowling Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Summer leagues are forming soon.

If you knew the facts about leasing, you'd never buy a car again!
For some unknown reason, the many advantages of leasing a car versus buying one continues to be one of the best kept secrets in the automobile business. Furthermore, a longstanding misconception states that you have to own or be in a business to lease a car. Not true! Anyone can lease. And most people should.
Come in and let us prove to you that leasing is truly the intelligent alternative to buying a car.

Q. Does Cohasset deserve a well-managed Water Department?

A. You bet we do.

Elect

PETER J. PRATT

Water Commissioner

75 Ripley Road
Cohasset, Massachusetts
383-6960

March 30, 1983

Dear Cohasset Voter,

Cohasset residents deserve a clean and abundant supply of water delivered at the lowest possible cost. I am running for the Cohasset Water Commission because I believe I can make a significant contribution to the efficient business management of the Water Department.

During the 1970's, as the Town faced water shortages, the Water Commissioners made a wise decision to construct our new reservoir and treatment plant. The completion of this system in 1978 has enabled Cohasset to avoid the periodic emergency water restrictions that have plagued neighboring towns.

Now, in the 1980's, we face new problems which require business management solutions. An integrated management approach is needed to deal with the problems of uncollected water bills of over $100,000; a $353,000 department debt to the Town; the needed replacement of aging pipes; and the system's overcapacity for present needs.

As a candidate for Water Commissioner, I have called for the development of a 5-year business management plan to resolve these problems. A plan that will:

- Ensure the prompt collection of outstanding water bills,
- Schedule the retirement of debts owed the Town,
- Allocate capital spending to areas of most pressing need,
- Turn our present excess water supply into profit through an effectively planned program of selling water to other communities.

An additional and critical problem facing our system is the potential impact of hazardous waste dumping near Cohasset's water supply. The Water Commission should continue to invoke its full regulatory and enforcement powers to halt the dumping of substances at identified sites in our watershed.

As a Cohasset native who has a personal dedication to the well-being of the community, I look forward to using my experience in business and in the political process for the benefit of Cohasset.

I would sincerely appreciate your vote for Water Commission on Election Day — Saturday, April 9.

Very truly yours,

Peter J. Pratt

DeSantis & Co. triumph on the sewer issue

By Mike Berger

Cohasset will stay the course, the alternative sewer course that is.

Voters overwhelmingly endorsed staying with Article 4 of the November special town meeting calling for Innovative and Alternative approaches to solving the town's overall sewer needs.

What apparently is rejected for now is construction of a central sewer plant and a state grant of $1.1 million towards design and construction estimated to be part of the $12.9 million Phase I Metcalf and Eddy engineering sewer plan.

Although Article 36 of Monday's annual town meeting did not specifically cite the state grant, it is obvious from the voice vote taken at 12:30 a.m. Tuesday, voters do not want the sewer commission to accept the state grant until the alternative approaches are fully investigated.

Voters overwhelmingly approved Article 35 calling for $20,000 for continuation of the alternative engineering study by Ward Associates. This is an additional $10,000 over and above the $10,000 appropriated at the November special town meeting.

Voters also rejected a motion by former sewer commissioner Gerard Stanton to have the board of health study the feasibility of on-site septic systems.

LEGAL STATUS

Town Counsel Richard Henderson told voters the state lawsuit is still hanging over the town. In 1979, Cohasset agreed to solve its pollution problems with the gradual construction of a sewer plant, and contracted with Metcalf and Eddy to design the plant.

Since May of 1980, Henderson said Cohasset hasn't followed up because the state was unable to respond with any construction money.

This changed March 11 when the state offered the $1.1 million for preparation of a facilities plan and final planning for the construction of the large central sewer plan.

Cohasset has until April 11 to accept or reject the offer. The town would have to provide an additional $497,169 as the applicant's share.

Henderson said if the state grant contract is not signed, the state could reinstate the lawsuit and impose expensive fines. "They are not in the position to do it or it is possible we may ask for an extension to accept the grant (at a later date.)"

Anne Rogers, assistant attorney general of the environmental protection division, refused in a letter to meet with town representatives to renegotiate the terms of the 1979 Agreement for Judgement or to discuss state funding of the proposed alternative sewer approach study.

"I think it is unfortunate that the town has instructed you (Special Town Atty. Thomas Bracken) to undertake court action to attempt to change the Agreement for Judgement. This office will oppose any attempt to make the changes you refer to. As we both know, legal proceedings on this matter will be time consuming and additional delays in this project will bring Cohasset closer to the prospect of losing 20 percent of federal funding for the project."

Concluding the nine-page letter, Rogers wrote: "The Division does not believe that the supplemental

School Board wins the budget fight

With a 16-vote victory, the school committee came out winners in Saturday's annual town meeting and will be allowed to spend nearly $53,000 more in the 1983-84 town budget.

Voters overruled the advisory committee in approving a near $3.8 million budget and a town budget of $7,829,953.

Despite an Easter weekend, about 450 residents attended town meeting. The secret ballot vote on the school issue was 205 residents backing the school committee and 189 residents supporting the advisory board's recommendation.

The two boards were locked in a debate over the past several months. The school committee cut nearly $231,000 from an original budget to come within $52,998 of the advisory board figure.

The advisory board rejected a last minute request from the school board to immediately return any excess state aid, amounting to $53,000 to the town treasury.

By virtue of Saturday's vote, school committee chairman Diana Kornet isn't sure if the new board will offer the same excess aid proposal to the town.

She said the return was predicated on the advisory board aproval of the school budget. Whether or not the excess aid is returned depends on the amount and the new board.

Two school committee seats are up for election Saturday. The new school committee will meet Monday to reorganize.

The extra $53,000 needed to budget the school department will come from surplus or available cash.

Town Accountant Bill Signorelli said the state certified the cash amount at $477,693. November's special town meeting appropriated $10,000 and if all the articles in April's town meeting are approved, it will leave the cash balance at $347,000. Now with the school vote, the balance is $294,000.

The debate was long and emotional. Supporters of the higher appropriation said Cohasset's reputation for excellence must be maintained, and for years the school budget has been chipped away.

Opponents warned of the line item transfer ability of the school committee and the need to stay in line with the overall budget figures.

The school committee vote was not unanimous. Member Martha Gjesteby agreed with the advisory board.

She said last year the school budget came in

Ramp for Town Hall

Thanks to the generosity of many residents and the coordination efforts of advisory board member James Lagrotteria, the future of a town hall ramp for the handicapped looks extremely promising.

Selectmen enthusiastically backed an article at annual town meeting calling for the appropriation of $5,000 for the design and construction of a ramp to provide access for handicapped individuals.

Cohasset surplus town water could raise some money

By Patricia Anne Walsh

If Prop. 2½ is restricting tax raising income, why doesn't Cohasset sell the surplus water from the town-owned water department's 323 million gallon reservoir in Beechwood to raise revenues?

The question seems simple. But the answer is complex, and investigation shows that the water department is in real difficulty.

The water department problems surfaced publically at Saturday's Town Meeting when advisory board vice-chairman James Lagrotteria presented the viewpoint of many North Cohasset citizens.

This district is bounded by Forest Avenue, Jerusalem Road, Hull Street and the golf course, and is not serviced by the Cohasset system but by the Hingham Water Co.

Lagrotteria asked why these citizens should be supporting the deficit which Town Accountant William Signorelli has placed at $353,855.

He also said 28 percent of the customers have no meter or a meter that does not work.

Signorelli said the deficit is made up of $206,000 from the purchase of the water company by the town, $69,976 deficit for fiscal year 1981, $25,411 deficit for fiscal year 1982, and $20,000 to settle a legal dispute with Arthur Schofield in construction costs; $17,468 for transfers from the reserve fund, and an estimated $15,000 as the water department share of the new computer system.

Signorelli added that if the department should generate a surplus, their debt to the town has priority; second priority is expenditures for capital improvements, and only after these, may water rates for customers be reduced under the laws and purchase agreement.

The water treatment plant on Lily Pond cost $1.9 million and is designed to treat an average flow of 1.2 million gallons and three million gallons daily at peak flow times, with an expansion capacity to 4.5 million gallons per day. Last year it pumped 247,719 gallons total.

The cost of the dam and reservoir was $850,000.

The safe yield for the combined watersheds of Aaron River, Brass Kettle Brook, and Lily Pond-Bound Brook is approximately 3.49 million gallons per day.

Residential customers are charged $27 minimum per quarter for the first 1,500 cu. ft. and $1.80 for each additional 100 cubic fet, since the last rate increase July 1, 1981.

Water Superintendent Curley says 20 customers were shut off recently in an effort to reduce delinquency. Eighteen of these paid part or all of their debts. Two were still turned off as of April 4. One hundred and ten customers are still delinquent.

Treasurer/Collector Gordon Flint said as of March 11, $31,449 plus $4,966 in interest for water bills were still uncollected, as well as $1,884 in sewer charges. His office received approximately $49,000 in long overdue payments in March.

Cohasset's week...

Asbestos content

A March 22 sampling for asbestos fibers in several locations of the Joseph Osgood and junior-senior high schools revealed the asbestos content is well below the state standard.

The state allows an asbestos fiber content of .04, but all samples came well below that level, Supt. Crowell said. The closest Cohasset came to the allowable limit was .01 at one of the school landings.

Supt. Crowell said he was "thrilled" at the results of the chemical testing completed by Briggs Engineering of Norwell. There is absolutely no asbestos danger to the students of Cohasset, he added.

Although the high school girls' locker room was thought to be a possible area of asbestos contamination, the testing revealed no such threat, Crowell said. Although the air samples are not required by the state, Cohasset decided to "take the bull by the horns and put it to rest," Crowell said.

Commuter boat damaged

"Gracious Lady," the new commuter boat from Hingham to Boston will not be in service until its damaged propeller can be repaired. Parts will be made in Florida and were due to be flown here this week. No estimate of when the boat will be in service has been reported yet. A new expanded schedule will go into effect when the boat is repaired. The schedule will include Saturday round trips for shoppers. The boat ferries commuters berween the Hingham Shipyard and the New England Aquarium. When repaired, the boat will make Saturday trips departing Hingham at 7:15 and 10:15 a.m. and returning from Boston at 8:15 a.m. and 4:15 p.m. Two weekday trips Boston to Hingham, will be added at 5:15 and 6:15 p.m. A one-week pass will be offered for $27 and a monthly pass will be available for $99. The regular fare is $3 each way. On weekdays the boat leaves Hingham at quarter past the hour between 6:15 and 11:15 in the morning and at 1:15, 2:15, 3:15 and 5:45 p.m. From Boston, the boat departs at quarter to the hour between 6:45 and 11:45 a.m. with afternoon trips scheduled at 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 5:15 and 6:15 p.m. For more information call Mass. Bay Commuter Services at 567-6227.

Junk food warning

At last week's school committee meeting, Margin Court resident Charlotte Leland, admonished the school department for selling junk foods like hot dogs and hamburgers to students in the school cafeterias.

Leland also asked the school committee to review the bus routes so that more students will be required to walk to school. The safety factor should of course be adhered to, but older students should be expected to walk. She said while reducing budget money for transportation, more walking routes would also be healthier for the children, she said. Leland said walking has been a proven factor for improved cardio-vascular health.

Leland also suggested that alternates to fatty meats such as hamburger should be offered in the schools' cafeteria. After reviewing the school menus, Leland noticed several offerings of non-nutritional meats including hot dogs and hamburgers with high fat content.

She asked that the school administrators attempt to strike a balance between what the students will select to eat, and what is nutritionally healthy.

Supt. Eugene Crowell praised cafeteria supervisor Patricia Wunschel, who also teaches home economics at the high school. He said the students "buy what they want to buy." In reviewing the successful, self-supporting cafeteria program, Crowell said students seem to prefer red meat, pizza and hot dogs. It would be hard to satisfy a high school student with a peanut butter sandwich, he said.

Cut, pierced lampshades

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for a three-week program for making cut and pierced lampshades.

Participants will make a lampshade with a design of their choice. The program will meet on three consecutive Thursday evenings at the Town Hall auditorium from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Richard Ainslie will instruct the course and class size will be limited. Non-residents will be allowed to register if space is available.

Classes commence in mid April. Call the Recreation Department office at 383-6791 to register.

This is the way you do it, Trisha (Peterson). Suzi Kecskemety, 12, gives her three year-old friend some hints before the Recreation Dept. egg hunt at Deer Hill. (Greg Derr photo)

THREE REASONS WHY:

1. SULLIVAN IS COMMITTED:

"My greatest motivation in seeking the Selectman's position is a sincere desire to professionally address the many issues confronting our Town. Issues pertaining to septage, the dump, zoning and growth directly affect not only the townspeople, but the overall character and personality of our community. If elected, and I serve this brief term well, I will ask to be re-elected in order that I might make a more long-term commitment to the Town of Cohasset."

2. SULLIVAN IS KNOWLEDGEABLE:

Sullivan has proven her interest in all the issues confronting Cohasset. She attended all interviews to select our new police chief. She has regularly attended Selectmen's meetings, Board of Health meetings, Board of Appeals hearings, Sewer Advisory Board meetings and public hearings conducted by the Planning Board. Sullivan has knowledge of and concerns for all the issues confronting the taxpayers — this is an essential qualification for an effective selectman for the people.

3. SULLIVAN IS ACCESSIBLE:

Sullivan feels that accessibility to elected officials is essential. For this reason, she has installed and will continue to maintain if elected, a Voter's Hot Line (383-1173). Sullivan's main job will be the business of the voters; she is presently and will continue to be available days and evenings to hear the concerns of the people of Cohasset.

The issue in this election is not WHO can do the job, but who can BEST do the job —

School Board wins budget fight . . .

$84,000 higher than the advisory board figure but as a result of the town meeting action to support the advisory board, the quality of education was not reduced. "We found we could absorb the $84,000 and we came out with a $65,000 surplus."

"I believe the cuts can be made to adjust to enrollment and will not reduce the quality of education," she said.

If an unexpected financial need arises, Gjesteby has confidence the advisory board would support a transfer.

Kornet said to take another $53,000 of cuts would invalidate the promise "we made to you about maintaining the quality of excellence."

Backers of education were not unanimous in their decision. Nancy Sandell, president of the PSO, reported the vote to back the school board recommendation was 7-3.

Parent Roy Fitzsimmons said he has four children attending Cohasset schools, but said the activities of the school committee needed to be watched. He said voters should know that advisory board member Jacqueline Dormitzer determined a $50,000 surplus could be found in the school budget.

He also warned Prop. 2½ determined the school committee is no longer fiscally autonomous "and it's about time they were aware of it."

High school teacher Robert Thompson said there can be no cuts if the system is to continue to produce seniors scoring the highest in the region on Scholastic Aptitude Tests. He also read a letter sent to local backers of education from Cohasset Teacher Association President Tom O'Neill about the impact of the advisory board's recommendation.

Louis Eaton, former advisory committee member, said the school committee can transfer line item expenditures in their budget and does not need permission from town meeting. He said in a previous fiscal year $54,000 was transferred from a utilities account.

"To say the amount the advisory committee will take will interfere with the quality of education, I can't see it," he said.

Town meeting action

School board member John Langmaid responded by saying the transfer was made in a year of teacher negotiations and "we stuffed money in places the union would not look for."

Referring to the claim the high school has several small classes of 20 or fewer students, Langmaid said eliminating these classes would eliminate Cohasset's comprehensive curriculum. These classes, he said, are art, industrial arts and music, and for some students it means the difference for them to stay in school.

TUITION ARTICLE POSTPONED

Realizing their victory and knowing the advisory board would oppose them again, the school committee backed off from submitting an article permitting the board to expend funds received for the education of non-resident students and for students who are foster care children or state wards.

This article, if passed, would have allowed the school department to receive the tuition money directly instead of having the money figured into state aid figures for the town.

The tuition money could amount to $11,000, School Supt. Eugene Crowell told the committee Monday in an emergency meeting called to discuss the board's stance on the issue.

Although many members support the article, the consensus of the board was the article should be submitted later, possibly at a special town meeting.

DEER HILL ROOF

In another matter, voters approved spending $21,000 to replace the roof over the kitchen at the Deer Hill School.

School Facilities Chairman Robert Sturdy said the roof has been repaired so many times, "it looks like a patchwork quilt." He said the 30 year-old roof was a decade beyond its maximum useful life.

Selectmen approve revised police rules

Last week selectmen voted to approve a revised set of police department rules and regulations compiled last summer by former Police Chief John DeBassio.

Although Chief Joseph Kealey agrees with the new police manual, he will ask all officers to review the handbook and to provide comments. Chief Kealey feels the input from his officers is necessary for the morale of the department.

Two weeks ago, selectmen Chairman Henry Ainslie reviewed the proposed handbook in detail. At that time, he inquired why policies regarding permanent intermittent officers had been omitted, as well as procedures for police stake outs.

After discussing the issues with Chief Kealey, executive secretary Mark Lanza reported that state law provides the necessary policies regarding the permanent intermittent officers. And in a letter to the board, Chief Kealey stated he didn't believe a written procedure for stake outs should be included in the manual. Each procedure is varied and to adhere to one written procedure would be difficult, according to Kealey.

The manual will now be submitted to the police officers for their comments. There is no contract stipulation which mandates the police associations approval of the police handbook.

Health officials continue probe of rusty barrels

State and local health officials are still investigating the contents of five old rusty barrels found in a site behind Norfolk Conveyer Company.

Nearly two weeks ago, WNEV-TV (Channel 7) televised a report which showed the barrels which had been buried for some time in the King Street woods.

State officials from the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering are conducting tests to see if any hazardous wastes were buried there.

Cohasset Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulous said at least five barrels were found dumped on the site.

The contents had some odorous substance but "it definitely wasn't water," she said. But it is obvious the substances in the barrels didn't belong there, said Eliopoulous.

Officials from Norfolk Conveyor told Eliopoulous the barrels were there when the company moved to the Rt. 3A location nearly 19 years ago. The former tenant was D.S. Kennedy, a radio antenna manufacturer.

Eliopoulous said Norfolk Conveyor has been cooperative and is bearing the expense to excavate the wooded site.

The barrels were taken to Braintree for testing. DEQE will determine where the barrels will next be sent.

Eliopoulous said she isn't sure when the final content results will be known because the state testing lab is backlogged with hazardous waste testing from Holbrook.

Eliopoulous also confirmed a federal health official report which said there is no evidence to indicate any oil was deposited into Lily Pond, a source of the town's drinking water. The spill happened four to six weeks ago.

Eliopoulous and Fire Chief Martin Dooley said the spill was minor. Dooley said the oil was not highly flammable and tests were taken by DEQE which proved to be negative.

Saturday's town election marks town history

Saturday will be an historic day for Cohasset.

The philosophy of town government will change as voters go to the polls to elect three new selectmen.

Wednesday, April 13, a new five-member board will reorganize.

There is also a race for a one-year selectman's term. Candidates are former Police Chief John DeBassio and Diane Sullivan.

Unopposed for two three-year terms are Frank England, former school board member, and Clifford Mitman, Jr., personnel board chairman.

Besides the change to a five-member selectmen board, the future of Cohasset will be determined by the election of school committee, board of health, planning boards and sewer and water commissions.

For the sewer commission, Edward Guild will face incumbent Maxwell Pounder for a one-year term. Incumbent Frank (Charles) DeSantis is unopposed for a three-year term.

For a three-year water commission term, candidates are Anthony Fasciano and Peter Pratt.

Frank C.J. Hamilton and Robert Sturdy will square off for a five-year term on the planning board.

Candidates for a three-year term for the board of health are incumbent Chairman Barbara Kern and Laurence Mitchell.

School committee candidates for a three-year term are incumbent Chairman Diane Kornet, incumbent member John F. Langmaid III and Judith Volungis.

Unopposed for three three-year terms as trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library are incumbents Barbara Power, Lucia Woods and newcomer Richard Dabrowski.

Unopposed for assessor is incumbent Chairman Brian Wilkins, and incumbent Richard Barrow for the recreation committee.

Polls will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday. Voting will be held in the Town Hall auditorium. Voters should line up in their respective precinct.

Assistant Town Clerk Fran Marks said 4,806 residents are eligible to vote. This is a decrease from the October 1982 figure of 4,950. In April 1981, 2,148 people voted, representing 46.3 percent of the vote.

Absentee voting will close at noon Friday. As of Monday morning, 125 ballots were received, Marks said.

Marks believes the results will be known about 9 p.m. and people may wait for the results in the auditorium.

As soon as possible, the results will be announced and a tally sheet will be taken to the police station for review.

NO CANDIDATE'S CORNER

The Mariner did not publish a Candidate's Corner page this week because we feel it is not fair if candidates have charges leveled at them, and not be able to respond before Saturday's election.

NEW HARBORMASTER RULES

Here are the new amendments to the harbor rules, endorsed by voters, the harbor study committee and Harbormaster Harry Ritter. These amendments should improve policing of the harbor.

No person shall moor any boat within the limits of Cohasset Harbor without obtaining a permit from the Harbor Master. A permit must be obtained for each calendar year at a fee set annually by selectmen. The application for such permit shall be made to the Harbormaster on a form prescribed by selectmen. The application shall state the name and address of the owner, the size and type of boat to be moored, the size and type of mooring, and, if the mooring is already in the water, the location thereof, with sufficient details to enable the Harbormaster to locate it.

On and after July 1, 1983, all boats moored in Cohasset Harbor will be required to display an annual decal on the port quarter aft of the boat to indicate that the mooring fee has been paid for the year and the boat is authorized to be on the mooring.

On and after July 1, 1983, mooring fees shall be paid by June 1 of each calendar year or the Harbormaster shall remove the mooring tackle from the confines of Cohasset Harbor of each individual for whom or entity for which no mooring fee has been paid and such removal shall be at the owner's expense.

No boat shall be made fast to a Town Landing or Pier for more than thirty minutes except by permission of the Harbormaster, which permission shall be granted only in case of emergency. Any individual or entity violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be liable for a fine of $10 for a first offense, $25 for a second offense and $50 for a third and each subsequent offense.

Boats anchored or moored in such a manner as to constitute a hazard to navigation or property may be moved at the owner's expense. As far as practical, the harbormaster shall require all commercial boats to be moored in a common area.

WATER PIPE REPAIRS

Town Meeting approved spending $221,000 to repair old water pipe on sections of Margin Street and Atlantic Avenue. The state financed project and the town's share will help eliminate pipes which in some cases are nearly 100 years old. The state is offering the water dept. $174,612 towards the repair. The project will begin sometime next fall and take about three weeks to complete and encompasses the section of Margin Street and Atlantic Avenue from Elm Street to the Cunningham Bridge. Borrowing state house notes will cost about $39,790 over a 10-year period.

GOVERNMENT STUDY REPORT

The government study committee reported any proposal to change the structure of town meeting can be considered at a special town meeting. This study came after a move to add two seats to the board of selectmen last year. After a multi-month review, the committee reported assessors should develop a five-year plan to be presented at the next annual town meeting. Their report will include equipment and personnel needed to complete the town's revaluation project. This report was adopted in the form of a non-binding resolution.

HONORED OFFICIALS

Given standing ovations for their hard work and service to the town were Selectman Chairman Henry Ainslie, Advisory Board Chairman Jean Cotten, former Town Moderator David Place, former Town Counsel J. Blake Thaxter and Planning Board Chairman Barbara Power.

AFS needs families

The Cohasset Chapter of AFS, an international, intercultural exchange program, is seeking families to host foreign students for the coming school year. Each visiting student is between the ages of 16 and 19 and lives as a member of a family while attending classes at Cohasset High School. Cohasset hopes to host two students this year.

A major quality desired in a host family is an openness to new ideas. Although many host families have children of high school age, families with young children or no children are eligible to host and are encouraged to apply.

Host families are not asked to make special expenditures for their AFS student, but they do pay food costs and incidental expenses which they would for any child. Host families may take a monthly tax deduction of $50 in accordance with provisions made by the U.S. Internal Revenue Service. AFS extends medical coverage to its students and a monthly allowance.

The candidates who apply for a year stay in the U.S. are carefully screened through their own national offices and the international headquarters of AFS in New York City.

Families who are interested in participating in the AFS experience can find out more about the program by calling Jane Goedecke at 383-6935.

EDWARD M. "TED" GUILD for SEWER COMMISSIONER

The Committee to Elect Ted Guild - Charlie DeSantis, Chairman

around town

☐Amanda Sweeney, daughter of Avis and David Sweeney, has been accepted for the Junior High SEMSBA Festival Chorus. Amanda was the only girl accepted (seven boys were, the largest amount of Cohasset students in a long time).

☐The next time you see Mary Davis, be sure to ask her to show you the pictures of her grandson, Craig. Craig is Donald Davis' son, and he is a beautiful baby! Donald is a special person. He donated one of his kidneys to his twin brother, Danny. As Donald's wife Donna (Sargent) said, "You gave your brother back his life, now God has given you a life in your son, Craig."

☐Speaking of efforts that were worth every bit of their time, the Booster's Dance was a success. Bruce and Barbara Dalrymple won lots of prizes through the raffle, as did Izzie Salvador. Harry Ritter won a night's lodging at Howard Johnson's and joked about it with his wife, Marge. Guess who won the other night's lodging at Howard Johnson's...that's right, Marge.

☐To the "Cohasset Phantom" who left a note in my typewriter wishing me a belated "Happy Groundhog Day," same to you. Cannot imagine who you are.

☐Marilyn Adams is preening like a peacock and with good reason. Doug Yeager, her "adopted son," made the dean's list this semester at Northeastern University. Doug has lived with the Adams family for the last few years and they are very proud of his accomplishments.

Karen Golden is in town, resting after her recent trip to Europe. She was recently promoted by her boss, Perry Ellis, and that means more buying trips to Europe. She looks like a European princess, absolutely stunning.

☐Jeff and Amy Loughran returned recently from California where they spent a month with their son and his family. Amy must have spent a lot of time in the sun, she looks as brown as a berry.

☐Erin O'Brien has received many phone calls after last week's article and wants to report that she will be in Cohasset this summer. People panicked when they thought that Erin's Springfield job made it impossible for her to be at the Town Pool, can you imagine the pool without her?

☐Brendan, Craig and Kevin Mulcahy are counting the hours until boarding time...they leave for Florida and Disney Land this week, and are very excited.

☐Reports are all good on Pat McCarthy, Sr. who is recovering rapidly after his recent stay in South Shore Hospital. He'll be out and around in his shiny red convertible soon.

☐Scott Ripley reports that everything is fine in the Songer family. Scott visited Andy, fellow 1982 CHS graduate, in Chicago a few weeks ago. Now that baseball season is upon us, we remember how much the Songer family contributed to the town.

☐Ester Pratt of 6 Schofield Road has undertaken a new business venture that sounds exciting. After leaving her position as a social worker with the South Shore Elder Service, she is opening her own business, "The Color Connection."

The Color Connection is a fashion color theory which identifies your unique skin tones and coloration, and characterizes them as one of the four seasons. The goal is to enhance your personal fashion impact by developing your key color harmonies, and to provide you with a method of practical application in the form of a color palette for use as a guide in your future wardrobe acquisitions.

Ester is willing to give presentations to any group wishing to hear about color analysis, or answer any questions concerning individual consultations and may be reached at 383-6466.

Bridget Leung and Jennifer Pool

☐Jennifer Pool and Bridget Leung model spirited new knits by Littleworld in the Children's Spring Fashion Show at Lord and Taylor.

☐Everyone remembers the Almeida family. Frank was the football coach here for many years; his wife Lorraine and their children were active in the town. His youngest daughter, Sandy, graduates from medical school this spring.

DeSantis & Co. triumph on sewer issue . . .

study can lead to any productive result. What that study contemplates is a plan to repair pipes in wetlands and repair on-site systems, reduce flow to the existing plant, install I/A systems on some lots, and connect Cohasset to Hull's sewage treatment plant. The Division does not believe this plan could succeed and the Division is not willing to have Cohasset fall another year or more behind its schedule while it learns that such a plan will not succeed. Perhaps five years ago Cohasset had the luxury of time to explore the feasibility of such speculative proposals as those to undertake work in a wetland, to find (or construct) a disposal site for Cohasset's sludge, to compel its residents to install holding tanks or mounds and in-home devices, and to attempt to persuade Hull to take Cohasset's sewage and Cohasset to appropriate funds for Hull's sewer system. But because of the continuing pollution of James Brook and the critical situation in the Phase One area, that luxury is no longer available.

"Although I realize that the Sewer Advisory Committee was for justifiable reasons initially attracted to the outline of a plan that they were first told would cost only $3,000,000, I would hope that they will take a hard look at what this new plan would really involve — a delay of several years before the feasibility of such a plan could even be evaluated — and reconsider their decision to bring legal action. In my view, such action can do no more than delay the inevitable and bring Cohasset closer to the 1984 cut-off date."

Advisory committee member Steve Bartow said in either case voters were taking a gamble and a calculated risk in choosing the Metcalf and Eddy plan or continuing with the Charles DeSantis sponsored alternative sewer approaches.

But he said the November special town meeting's message is that the alternative approaches should be investigated fully. "The alternative is owed us," he said, speaking on behalf of the advisory committee.

Sewer Commissioner Max Pounder amended Article 36 to include a termination of the contract with Metcalf and Eddy, a "milestone" limit which would include test borings and survey work and a cutoff point of $40,000 expended.

This amendment was defeated on a hand count of 168-114.

Pounder said, "Right now there are no I/A drawings, schemes or prices. It's a top of the head guess based on someone's experience. The intent of this article (Article 36) is to maintain the ability to use the state grant if I-A is not effective. We don't want to lose our position on the grant funding."

He added a decision not to sign the grant could mean Cohasset will come off the funding list and "it may be difficult to get back on."

Pounder said comparisons between Metcalf and Eddy and Ward Associates should be compared and "then we should decide which way to go. Don't give up the option of the sewer plant just yet."

Patricia Anne Walsh, a Cohasset resident, told voters the state Legislature did recently approve funding to replace federal money. But Pounder said anything the Legislature approves isn't definite.

Water Commissioner Lot Bates angrily said voters should pay attention to a state study in 1965 which found Cohasset's soils could not support alternative septic systems.

Dr. Michael Bliss of the board of health said he supports Article 36 because "it seems the I-A might not work. If it loses, we can cover the bets."

A lawsuit may also be submitted if commissioner Joseph Gwinn signs the state contract.

Engineer William Baird of Red Gate Lane and Jeffrey Bates, environmental attorney for Goodwin, Proctor & Hoar in Boston and a Cohasset resident, recently raised the question of whether it was proper for the state to offer the grant, when federal regulations specify that a FONZI (a finding of no significant impact) or an environmental impact statement had to be accomplished first.

A FONZI may go into effect after a 30-day period in which the public may file comments. However, an EPI may take from six months to over 18 months. An EPI would require full investigation of alternative and innovative solutions according to Bates, such as Ward has proposed.

One or several persons may request an EPI under a "Citizens Suit Notice" to the EPA. A Citizens Suit Notice requires the EPA to make a decision within 60 days as to the necessity of completing an EPI. If they do not reply, the citizens "would be able to go to court to have the EPA do their duty," Bates said.

A ramp for the Town Hall . . .

The advisory board rejected the article. Although the members said the need exists, the ramp would only allow access to the first floor and not to town offices on the second floor. The $5,000 cost is prohibitive given the fiscal constraints of Prop. 2½, Lagrotteria said.

In March, Theodore Carmone, president of Carmone Corp., wrote to town officials and offered to donate tools and labor if the town would pay for materials.

Lagrotteria estimated the concrete materials at $800. He said "with the blessing of the advisory board," he set up a special account for donations at Cohasset Savings Bank and to date, the $800 total was reached.

During Monday night's town meeting when some residents doubted if the fundraising effort would be successful, Lagrotteria said "I have the money right here. I didn't want to say it, but I have the money."

Selectmen Chairman Ainslie, who has experience in examining handicapped ramp contracts for Norfolk County, doubted whether $800 would be sufficient, given the design and its conformance with state regulations.

The Highway Dept. has also volunteered to build the ramp's footings.

Ainslie said several years ago, plans were designed to renovate town hall and eventually plans called for an installation of an elevator.

Notes & comment

...The first part of democracy's annual rite of spring, to wit Annual Town Meeting, is over. Here's hoping our citizens aren't so exhausted they forget to parcipate in the second part, to wit Annual Town Election.

The 1983 election is somewhat historic, for it sends us off on the 17 year race for the year 2000 with five selectmen instead of three. Folks in 2000 are likely to point to 1983 as setting a political tone for the rest of the century. Therefore, please don't forget to cast your own vote on Saturday.

...The race for selectman between Diane Sullivan and John DeBassio has been somewhat inspiring. What's a pity is that one of these two candidates has to lose this week. In our view this contest has produced two "winners," and we hope that the winner who shall receive the lesser number of votes will consider another candidacy in the future. We praise them for running a campaign based on issues rather than personalities.

...Town Meeting can only be described as very successful. That it did its duty in just two sessions is a tribute to everyone, but particularly to moderator Bill Weeks. We're repeating ourselves we know, but darn it, Bill overall deserves a repeat encomium because he repeatedly runs a good meeting. Ever been to a town meeting where the moderator didn't know his lecturn from a fire exit? We have, and we therefore consider Cohasset rather blessed.

...The proposed compromise by the school committee to turn over any increased state reimbursement for education to the town treasurer seems a pretty good one. Not everyone is happy with it, a fact that itself is probably an endorsement. When both sides of an issue regard themselves as "pinched" the odds are that the public interest has been served.

...School officials still sometimes suffer from Wellesleyosis, a nasty condition in which unwarranted feelings of inferiority cause a town's statesmen to compare their bailiwicks to the town of Wellesley, said to be somewhere to the north of Braintree.

Does Wellesley use cowhide soccer balls? So must we! Does Wellesley spend $70 per annum on grass seed? We can't do with less!

Well, we regret to report that the last time we checked one of Wellesley's selectmen was under investigation over certain money that couldn't be accounted for. We guess someone better start embezzling fast — or else we'll have to give up trying to keep up with the Wellesleys. Not a bad idea.

...Anyone left with an ear drum after town meeting concluded at 12:30 a.m. Tuesday can conclude the Charles DeSantis sponsored alternative sewer plan is the way town meeting voters want to go. This should mean the sewer commissioners, selectmen, town counsel and anyone else involved should cooperate, work together and fully investigate the Ward Associates' engineering plan. The voters' mandate is clear and there should be no more bickering or scheming to undermine the alternative proposal.

...Besides the problems of the sewers, 100 percent revaluation and the landfill, the next pressing problem is the Water Dept. and Water Commissioners must come to grips with the enormous deficit taxpayers are now saddled with. We hope this week's election will bring new and fresh ideas to a perennial problem. Let's get the Water Department in the black by town meeting next year.

...Town Meeting did have its lighter moments. School committee member Dick Conley twice guided a friendly pet to the promised land (sunny surroundings).

Pictures could only tell the story between Town Counsel Richard Henderson and his wife Linda. Concerning the town ramp issue, Linda proposed an amendment to guarantee the town would come up with the remaining balance of money if the fundraising effort fell short. She asked town counsel if the amendment was legal. Town Counsel approached the microphone rather sheepishly and quietly responded, "No." Atty. Henderson was right to the point but the high school auditorium exploded with laughter.

Vote Saturday!

Polls open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

A conversation with the . . .

Diane Sullivan

By Jane Lane

Diane Sullivan says she will be a very effective selectman.

She has lived in Cohasset several years, attended many municipal meetings and has a continued, active interest in the town's government.

Sullivan says she will be a 24-hour-a-day representative of this town. She does not have an occupation that will take her away from the community. She will be here to assist her constituency, she says.

Although town meeting will have decided this issue before the Mariner is published, Sullivan shares her thoughts about the Metcalf and Eddy central sewer proposal.

"In November 1982 at a special town meeting, we voted to have our sewer commissioners and selectmen, for the sum of $10,000, investigate alternatives to the Metcalf and Eddy Plan. We also removed a right the sewer commissioners had by statute to sign the Metcalf and Eddy design contract," she says.

"Because of yet another legal snafu, the $10,000 was determined not able to be used for the investigation by Ward Associates. Article 35 asks for funds to do the study we ordered back in November 1982. The cost should be $10,000, not the $20,000 mentioned in the article. The original $10,000 is still intact, and was never spent," Sullivan says. "I would vote yes an amended article 35. Nothing has happened since to change my mind except the constant delay in implementing the intent of town meeting."

As for the "DeSantis proposal" to study alternatives to the central sewer system, Sullivan notes "all DeSantis appears to be saying is let's do the $10,000 study and review the findings carefully before we sign any contract with anyone."

"I will vote no to article 36 which would have returned to the sewer commissioners the right to sign the Metcalf and Eddy contract," she says. "Since I don't believe we'll ever vote to sewer Phase II or Phase III because the town simply can't afford it — I believe we are looking at approximately 500 homes in Phase I to be sewered at a cost of $14 million. Between the town, federal and state government, that comes to a cost per home of $28,000."

When asked what the role of town counsel should be, and how frequently legal counsel should be requested by the town, Sullivan replies, "Initial access to town counsel should be through the selectmen's office. He should be used when legally necessary.

"No matter how supportive we may or may not be of our town counsel, I see no harm, at the very least, of this being a bid item," she continues.

"However, for the future, I believe the town should give serious consideration to having our own attorney on the town's payroll. Perhaps on a half-day basis. We should examine our legal expenditures and determine if this would accomplish more for the town (we would be his number one priority) with a quicker response time for approximately the same expense."

Sullivan responds negatively when asked what the role of the selectmen is in managing the police and fire departments.

"The management of the police and fire departments should be done by the respective chiefs," she says.

"The chiefs themselves are answerable to the board of selectmen for their own performances which will be evaluated by the selectmen when renewal of their contracts is before that board.

"Policy making should be the selectmen's responsibility with the chiefs managing their departments under the approved policies as they have been hired to do."

Sullivan mentions several ways in which she would improve the selectmen's image in the community. First, she will remain responsive to town meeting's vote. She will also stress accessibility.

As selectman, Sullivan would encourage attendance of residents at selectmen's weekly meetings, and active involvement with other town boards by expressing interest in cooperation and support.

A final suggestion by Sullivan would be to televise selectmen's meetings on local public service channels when cable television is installed in Cohasset.

Sullivan said, "As a result of action already taken by the board of selectmen, Cohasset may very well have a fully operational cable televesion system within the next year. American Cablesystems Corp., which will build the system, is pledged to provide channels at no cost to the town.

"I believe the board of selectmen can demonstrate their leadership by making their deliberations as visible as possible. The rapidly approaching technology of cable television can greatly enhance town government by communicating with and informing the public."

Diane Sullivan

She has installed and has pledged to maintain, a special voter's hot line (383-1173) in order to accommodate citizen imput and to encourage dialogue with residents.

The 42 year-old political newcomer says she does not support the strong police chief law. "I see no reason why the chief of police and the selectmen can not work well in the best interests of Cohasset under our existing system," she said.

Sullivan also does not support returning the position of police chief to Civil Service.

Since removing the police chief from Civil Service in 1979, we've only had one chief. He was not able to work under the board of selectmen, and so resigned prior to the end of his contract for another higher-paying position," she says.

"I don't believe we have given this a fair opportunity to work well," she continues. "While it would give police officers an incentive to work toward the highest level, it would not mean they couldn't attain that position. I have pledged my support to both new chiefs and support the present system, while giving it a good chance to work. I believe it is in the best interest of Cohasset for those positions protected under Civil Service regulations."

Sullivan supports the school committee's needs for funds on a "must-have" basis, but not to override the guidelines which must be adhered to by the other departments."

According to Sullivan, she would prefer to have the school committee stay within its allowed budget, and if a strong need arose later, the committee could come before the advisory board and document the need for a transfer from the reserve fund.

"I think we have a fine school department and we all should be supportive of them. But by giving them the requested funds 'up front,' over the advice of our advisory board, I believe we are setting a precedent. We must be careful in the future not to allow a precedent to be established," she adds.

Sullivan feels the question whether or not to provide Cohasset Village with 24-hour police patrols, should be answered by the police chief.

"If he should find that it is absolutely necessary — and I believe he has stated police respond whenever they get a complaint and patrol regularly — then he should find the way to resolve the problem," Sullivan says. "The board of selectmen should be supportive of the chief."

Sullivan has attended several selectmen's meetings when the subject of guest permits for the beaches has been the topic of debate. Sullivan still maintains the town should not abolish the guest permits, but she favors increasing the cost and decreasing the time limit for the permit.

"In order to cull out the abusers of the guest permits I would suggest increasing the fee to $10 and perhaps, decrease the term from two weeks to a lesser period. This should help abate the abusers. However, I would not take away the guest stickers from the majority to punish a few," she says.

When asked how she felt about allowing video arcades within the town, Sullivan remembers an incident which occurred several years ago. She says a well-respected resident of the town proposed an arcade. "Her overriding motivation was the children," she says. "I supported her then by writing to the selectmen.

"However, outside interests coming into Cohasset have as their motivation, monetary profits — not our children," Sullivan adds. "That, together with the adverse reaction in town to video centers, would place me squarely aainst any such proposal."

Sullivan, who is waging her first campaign for elected office, is a former supervisor of finance for Mister Donut of America, Inc. During her employment there, her responsibility was to ensure that all buildings and equipment packages were financed with all the related legal documentation. Sullivan was involved with franchises, attorneys, banks and private investors.

She has two sons, one who will graduate this May from Assumption College, and another who will enter the Osgood School in the fall.

John DeBassio

By Mike Berger

Former Police Chief John DeBassio frankly missed town government.

That's his principal reason for running for a one-year seat on the selectman's five-year member board.

After serving 20 years as a police officer and gaining familiarity with the government, he found he missed the people interaction.

He was originally asked by friends to run and quickly responded, "No." But then he thought, and realized his knowledge of the town would be important to the five-member board.

Besides, there was some unfinished business he had left in the Police Dept. such as the police rules and regulations.

DeBassio is pleased with the appointment of Joe Kealey as permanent chief and said he won't interfere with Kealey's decisions. He intends to work with Kealey and assist him whenever needed, especially with manpower and recruitment.

"I fully support the appointment of Joe as chief. It was a good selection. He has proven his administrative capability during the selection process and his months as acting chief," said DeBassio.

In addition, DeBassio would like to put his consumer affairs knowledge to work. He feels selectmen must be careful and control licensing, especially regarding zoning planning, adult bookstores and licensing of amusement games.

Other important issues DeBassio feels selectmen must consider are the sewer issue, aerial spraying of pesticides and the communication between town boards, commissions and selectmen.

He feels it is critical for selectmen to know what other boards are discussing and deciding. "I feel the role of the board of selectmen is to shape the quality of government and to coordinate activities."

DeBassio acknowledges there are some differences among current board members about what the role of the selectmen should be in a small community.

"What's impressed me about Cohasset residents is that they are proud of the history and tradition of the town and it is reflected in town government. It is therefore a closely knit community.

"I think we should resolve our problems within the town, but look at other towns with similiar problems and how they solve them. This isn't to be critical but we are not taking advantage of other communities and how they have dealt with problems."

DeBassio has lived in Cohasset for 2½ years. He was born and educated in Boston and served in the Navy during the Korean War. He worked in construction for several years and after passing the police exam, joined the Brockton Police Dept. in 1963.

He enrolled in Massasoit Community College and graduated with an associate's degree in criminal justice and in 1974 received a B.A. in that field from Stonehill College, graduating with a 3.75 grade point average.

His educational achievements include a Master's degree from Northeastern University in criminal justice administration and courses at the F.B.I. National Academy.

He was promoted to sergeant in 1975 and began looking for promotional advancement in 1976. He found the Cohasset advertisement for permanent police chief in 1980 while also taking the promotional exam for lieutenant in Brockton.

After serving for two years as chief, DeBassio resigned as Cohasset's police chief to become the Director of Corporate Security for the Foxboro Company.

TOWN COUNSEL ROLE

"There are very few things done in government which do not require research of law. Town Counsel should be a resource for the board of selectmen and department heads," DeBassio said.

He said it is important for selectmen to make judgement within the law and feels town counsel is an intricate part of the government process.

SCHOOL BUDGET

DeBassio feels sympathy for the school committee as well as the advisory committee. Both he said, have worked hard in the budget process and have difficult decisions.

"When you look at the cuts already made in the school dept. you also have to look at the manpower reductions in the police dept. and others.

"If the quality of education is affected by $53,000 my support of whether to cut or not depends on the availability of surplus funds and what exactly would be cut. I don't think the cuts should be arbitrary. Each situation needs an individual look."

POLICE AND FIRE DEPT. MANAGEMENT

DeBassio said when voters decided to take the fire and police out of Civil Service rules, selectmen had the choice of setting parameters of controlling both departments by selecting a chief, approving a contract, establishing priorities and giving the chief the confidence and authority to operate the department.

The second parameter is to hire someone to administer the actions decided by the board.

The current board, said DeBassio, has chosen the way to approve the rules and regulations themselves in the Police Dept., which is the only department where selectmen approve the rules. DeBassio feels if a contract is signed, selectmen should have the confidence and a chief to compose and administer the rules.

STRONG, WEAK CHIEF

DeBassio said the contract given to Kealey now relates to a "weak chief," i.e. he does not have the authority to operate the department without interference from selectmen. "I advocate a strong chief. He should have the responsibility but also the authority. I don't think he has the authority. But there is nothing wrong if you have a nice relationship with the board," he said.

CIVIL SERVICE

DeBassio feels the position of police chief should not be returned to Civil Service because selectmen lose the ability to evaluate and make administrative changes.

He would prefer a citizens selection committee be re-established to make a preliminary choice among three finalists for the chief's position.

SEWER ISSUE

DeBassio supports the November special town meeting mandate to look into alternative approaches to the Metcalf and Eddy sewer plan.

"We should spend the time looking at the alternatives and see if they are the best solutions for the town. We have the tenative prices from Metcalf and Eddy. We should hold on to them, and make comparisions with the alternative approaches. We should also negotiate with DEQE," DeBassio said.

John DeBassio

He added selectmen should work together with the sewer commission and should also work with other town departments to achieve a final answer to the town's sewer problems.

Certain boards, he said, should be assigned study of certain issues such as health, engineering, legal and "all boards should work towards achieving one goal."

SELECTMEN'S P.R.

DeBassio feels selectmen can improve their standing in the community with an improved quality of decisions and the procedures used to arrive at a decision. Decisions should involve fairness and sensitivity, he said.

"Government is based on majority rule and there are a number of sides of issues. What the board must realize is that there are no winners or losers but solutions and do what's best for the town."

COHASSET VILLAGE

DeBassio feels there should be more deployment of police in Cohasset Village if the manpower is available and the complaints warrant it. But Prop. 2½ has somewhat taken that away, he said. As former chief he said if an officer was not busy on a call and not directed to a specific patrol, he would be assigned a preventative patrol in town.

GUEST STICKERS

DeBassio said he tends to support "doing away with guest stickers" because of the limited parking and beach access to residents. In the past it has tended to be abused.

VIDEO GAME LICENSE

When he served as chief he worked with selectmen to draw up someparameters. He feels there should be a limit to amusement game licenses in barrooms, grocery stores, subshops and restaurants.

A grateful school board

To the Editor:

The school committee wishes to express its appreciation to those citizens who supported our budget at last Saturday's town meeting. Although this budget is a significant amount of money, our per pupil cost is less than many of the towns whose goals for comprehensive academic excellence are similar to ours.

We pledge to continue to provide a good return on your investment in our young people. We encourage your attendance at our meetings, and welcome your participation and ideas for improvement.

LWV questions the candidates

Here is a copy of the Cohasset League of Women Voters Guide sent to all candidates.

Two questions were asked of all the candidates. They are: What experience and or special qualities do you have that would help you perform the duties of the office you seek? What are the most significant problems and opportunities you see for this position during the next term of office?

SELECTMEN

One Position - One Year

John A. DeBassio, 6 Norfolk Road

1. I bring to the Board of Selectmen a proven record of professional integrity and 20 years of municipal government service. That broad experience includes, but is not limited to, a realistic working knowledge of Massachusetts General Laws, Civil Service Practice, Municipal Licensing Commission Rules and Regulations, Consumer Protection Policies and Procedures, Collective Bargaining Negotiations and Processes and the ability to plan, coordinate and direct programs which most effectively utilize the Town's personnel and resources.

2. The newly constituted five man Board of Selectmen have a unique opportunity to establish new goals, direction and professional administrative standards for the conduct of Town government. I would like to participate in that historical process.

While significant problems do exist and may be measured in terms of our failure to correct sewerage, water and landfill issues, these deficiencies are of our own making, since we have lacked the leadership, organization and timely purpose to perform the tasks.

Planning must be undertaken now and we must be attentive to our future and our administrative responsibilities. While the issues may change, our dedication and efficiency of government must prevail.

Diane C. Sullivan, 708 Jerusalem Road

1. I have a strong business background. While my chief area of concentration was in finance as Supervisor of Finance for Mister Donut of America, Inc., I also have had extensive exposure to legal matters and personnel benefits and pensions, all of which experience will be invaluable to me as I share in the handling of the town's business. Since I believe it is absolutely necessary that our town officials be aware of the issues confronting other Boards in town and offering their assistance, I have shown my willingness to perform in this matter by regular attendance at Selectmen's meetings, Board of Health and Appeals Board meetings. I have informed myself on the issues. Uniquely, I am available days as well as evenings to be responsive to the townspeople and to carry on with the affairs of Cohasset. I will be able to work harmoniously with all Board members to further the interests of Cohasset.

2. The most significant problems confronting us are the sewering issue and the landfill. We voted on Nov. 29, 1983, to temporarily alter our course of entering the design phase of a new treatment plant to take another look at whether a cost effective, innovative alternative waste water disposal solution could be possible for us. Since this vote came after the Town had signed an agreement with the State, it has created deep concern. However, the Selectmen have been charged and must proceed as voted at Special Town Meeting. However the townspeople come together on this issue, the Selectmen will have to spend a good deal of time on this very important problem.

Our Board of Health has done a good job in getting our landfill in compliance with the State's regulation, but I believe we must all join together in searching for an alternative to operating our own landfill, perhaps by regionalization of waste disposal converting waste to energy.

Our new five member Board of Selectmen will have a fine opportunity to have a wider range of participation on business before them and more hands to accomplish their important tasks.

SELECTMEN

Two Positions - Three Years

Frank W. England, 48 Old Coach Road

1. In addition to my experience as an elected municipal officer on the School Committee, and my service as Chairman of that Committee, I bring to the Board of Selectmen more than 30 years of general and specific business experience in financial areas in the addition to the supervision of both line and management staffs. As Bond Manager for Aetna Life & Casualty, I have had to plan for and achieve realistic

RE-ELECT
JOHN F. LANGMAID III
to the
COHASSET SCHOOL COMMITTEE

EXPERIENCED: "I have served for 6 years on the Cohasset School Committee. The most significant accomplishment of my two terms has been the development of a positive, enthusiastic attitude on the part of the students, parents, staff and School Committee. A sense of trust and confidence in our school system has been established resulting in our students' high academic, athletic, and extra curricular achievements."

AVAILABLE: "Due to my forced early retirement caused by rheumatoid arthritis and subsequent complications, I have the time necessary to thoroughly inform myself about the issues which come before the committee. I am an advocate for providing the children of Cohasset with a first-rate public education. I am also an advocate of evenhandedness in spending available town funds on all services. I would hope to be able to facilitate communication among town departments so all needs of all residents can be addressed."

RESPECTED: "I am most appreciative of the support and encouragement which so many of you have given me over the past years. My goals for your schools — excellence, comprehensiveness, stability, responsiveness, and accountability are apparently shared by many. I am grateful for the opportunity to serve the town, and I respectfully request one of your two votes on Election Day - Saturday, April 9."

financial goals.

Because most of our current and future problems are and will be in planning, financial and personnel areas, I feel I will be effective in planning with the Board of Selectmen to set realistic parameters.

Certainly, my exposure to the school administration, which accounts for over 55 percent of tax expenditures, will assist the Board of Selectmen when it attempts to make a fair assessment of how to divide the town's financial resources. In the future the public will and is already demanding accountability in all governmental areas.

2. Problems facing the Town are both old and new ones.

Significant problems continue to be in sewerage, sanitary landfill and planning areas. The Town's assessment issue and Prop. 2½ continue to force our attention on money issues — directing us to spend less dollars as our costs for all services rise. We must concentrate on improving our collection method for Town services. Poor collection methods cost the Town money in loans and interest.

Significant opportunities which exist for the new Board of Selectmen are as follows:

Leadership: Selectmen should look ahead and approach Town affairs from the long-range, as well as from the day-to-day point of view.

Cooperation: Selectmen should foster cooperation and coordination among the various Town committees and town departments.

Planning: This must take place at all levels of Town government.

I continue to feel confident about the Selectmen's ability to help to solve the Town's problems. The new, expanded Board of Selectmen will offer the Town an extensive business diversification along with the additional manpower to devote to planning.

As a Selectman, I will devote my time and abilities to anticipating trouble and in planning to forestall crises. My recommendations and my votes will be well-researched and documented.

Clifford Mitman, Jr., 118 Beach Street

1. I am now in my second term on the Personnel Committee and in my second year as Chairman. This has given me an opportunity to learn about operations of all Town Departments. During my tenure on the Personnel Committee, I have attempted to make the Committee more accessible to Town employees, and resolve conflicts through broader, open participation in decisions, while encouraging a sense of mutual respect even where there is disagreement.

My day-to-day work as a Management Consultant involves setting strategies and goals, planning for the future, and implementing decisions and resolving differences, all of which will help to provide the kind of perspective and direction needed to be an effective Selectman.

2. We are faced with some immediate problems and opportunities that need to be addressed by Selectmen. These include:

— Resolution of the sewer issue in a way that balances the possible advantages of the Innovative and Alternative approaches with the risks we run of not following the State consent decree.

— Assuring that reassessment is proceeding and that results will be on time and acceptable.

— Installing the new computer and associated systems and procedures, to provide improved, more efficient and more responsive Town services.

— Developing better, more coordinated working relationships with all Town Departments, Boards and Commissions.

At the same time, the increase in the size of the board, with proper organization and planning, should enable the Board of Selectmen to take a longer view of issues.

Residents need to feel confident that Selectmen are not only dealing with the necessary day-to-day decisions, but are acting as a catalyst in providing overall direction, planning and control for the future of Cohasset.

SEWER COMMISSION
One Position - One Year

Edward M. Guild, 365 Jerusalem Road

1. a. Extensive experience in multi-million dollar contract negotiations with governments, industry and consulting engineers.

b. More than twenty-five years experience in the specification and sale of complex systems for water treatment and purification.

c. Vice-President of Ionics, Inc., Watertown. I believe that, at a time when expenditures of millions of dollars are under consideration, at least one member of the Board of Sewer Commissioners should have a strong business background.

d. A.B. in Physical Science from Harvard University.

e. Property owner and taxpayer.

2. Today, Cohasset is faced with one of the most major problems in its history. The manner in which this problem is solved will determine the quality of life in our Town well into the next century.

I believe that the proposed central sewer plant which will never service more than 52 percent of the Town will have such an adverse impact on our environment, our schools and other Town services and will be so costly that alternative solutions must be investigated. As Sewer Commissioner, I shall insist on the thorough investigation of alternative systems which will be in full compliance with State and Federal Regulations, will cover the entire Town (the first priorities being the Veterans and Hillside areas) and will do so at a fraction of the cost of a central plant.

Alternative solutions have been highly successful in communities similar to Cohasset. It is unthinkable that we should not determine if these alternative methods can be applied here before authorizing any additional commitments or expenditures. I see in our present problem the great opportunity to preserve the quality of life that we all love, to service the entire Town and to reduce costs substantially. As Sewer Commissioner, and as a supporter of the recently passed, "Article 4," I shall devote all of my efforts towards the achievement of these objectives.

COHASSET CHOSE JOHN DEBASSIO

John DeBassio didn't come to Cohasset the typical way, by being born here, or by happening to find a home here. He was chosen...

In 1980, a six-member police chief search committee comprised of some of Cohasset's finest community leaders and successful businessmen chose John DeBassio as one of three individuals, of over 100 candidates, to be interviewed by selectmen. It was an important search, for John DeBassio, if selected would lead one of the most sensitive departments in Cohasset.

The search committee chose John DeBassio for many reasons: his leadership ability: his personal initiative in having gained an education in both criminal justice and public administration; his experience in the instruction of men and women in criminal justice programs at the college and university levels; and his personal stability and integrity.

When John DeBassio was offered the job of police chief in the fall of 1980, Cohasset knew more about John DeBassio than John Debassio would ever know about any of us, individually. He had been personally interviewed and reinterviewed by the search committee and the selectmen on many occasions. A background search was done regarding both his professional and private life. Various other firm guidelines were met, with excellence.

Boston. My experience includes designing residences and schools with on site disposal systems and serving as a member of a value engineering team that reviewed drawings and specifications for a major sewage disposal plant in Rhode Island.

As the incumbent I have researched proposed solutions, talked frequently with State officials, interviewed engineers and maintained good relations with all. I believe we can achieve most for the town by proving our points with hard data and negotiation, resorting to costly legal confrontation only when our case is strong and negotiations fail.

I have the experience to know the language, ask specific questions, expect complete answers, apply logic, and make reasonable judgments.

2. To insure we get the most cost effective, efficient, and permanent waste water disposal solution possible.

To closely monitor and question the engineering logic and methods of collecting data, the analyses, conclusions, and final design of proposed solutions.

To collect enough on site data to show that innovative and alternative (I & A) solutions of waste water disposal are the best alternative to building a sewer plant.

To protect the Town from potential additional costs of 3 to 4 million dollars due to federal funding reductions that go into effect in October of 1984, and preserve the Town's position on the Commonwealth's Federal Construction Grants Project Priority List for fiscal year 1984.

To insure a permanent method of septage disposal is available.

To make sure all areas of Town are given the opportunity to be incorporated in the final overall plan to solve waste water disposal problems and a wastewater management program is established to insure the continued effectiveness of the final solution.

To keep the present plant working as close as possible to its discharge permit.

SEWER COMMISSION
One Position - Three Years

Charles DeSantis, 260 Forest Avenue

. I am a 1964 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy with a general engineering and math background. I grew up in Cohasset, left for the service, and returned with my family in 1979. Cohasset is my home and my interest. I bring to you a sincere commitment to the long-term best interest of Cohasset. I believe I listen well, I hope to be fair, and I am willing to lead.

I am committed to the principle of home-rule — that the people of Cohasset determine what course is right for them, not state bureaucrats.

2. Our greatest task is to implement the Town Meeting vote of Nov. 29, 1982 which directs the Town to pursue less costly alternatives to the present central sewering plan and to address all waste water problems within the community. The Sewer Commission, the Board of Selectmen and an informed electorate must now convince the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Quality Engineering that their role is to serve us, the people of Cohasset, and not to deny us our right to pursue less costly and more equitable and effective solutions to our waste water problems. Our solution must be one that we can all live with, not one that will destroy us financially and possibly environmentally.

Another vital task for the short-term is working with our plant's present commercial subscribers by devising methods which will allow business expansion that will not impair the operation of our plant.

ASSESSOR
One Position - Three Years

Brian R. Wilkin, 8 Pratt Court

1. In April, I will have completed two years in office. This period has probably been the most difficult period in the recent history of the office. Our Board went through the hiring of two part-time appraisers, and one revaluation firm, each time negotiating a contract. I think I have learned from the problems I have experienced.

During a week in September of 1982, I went to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and took the now required five-day Assessing Administration Course offered by the Department of Revenue. I passed the four hour written examination. This year I am serving as Chairman of the Board.

2. The most significant problem facing the Board of Assessors in the coming year is the completion and implementation of the revaluation program. The 1972 revaluation was a poor job and the Town has suffered from it since. It will be the assessor's job to see that a proper job is done and that inequities are minimized. The firm that we hired has excellent credentials and should do a professional job.

During the course of the revaluation, the Assessor's Office will take part in the installation of the Town's new computer system. The system will help us keep our information current and will allow rapid retrieval. An in-house facility will allow us to send our bills out in a more timely manner. Tardy billing is one of the problems I would hope to remedy in my next term.

PLANNING BOARD
One Position - Five Years

Frank C.J. Hamilton, 244 Beechwood Street

1. Over the past seven years, I have served Cohasset in both volunteer and paid capacities and am familiar with the Town, its governing structure and departments.

Since serving as an Army officer from 1968-1975, I have always endeavored to anticipate long term needs and solutions.

As a 1981 Stonehill College graduate, I majored in Public Administration.

Courses taken in Urban and Rural Planning, Sociology and Economics will benefit me as an individual working for the community on the Planning Board.

2. The people of Cohasset must decide now as to what extent they wish the Town to grow. Decisions and commitments made now and during the next five years of this term will direct us through the turn of the century.

Further expansion must address the severe limitations of Cohasset's geography.

The charm and character that "is" Cohasset, left unconsidered, could be lost to urbanization.

Robert H. Sturdy, 270 Jerusalem Road

1. I am a retired business man with an engineering background (M.I.T.). Both in my business and as a member of the Brookline School Committee, I have been responsible for site selection, planning and construction of buildings. I have studied in detail Cohasset's zoning bylaws and feel prepared to make a significant contribution to the Planning Board.

2. I think Cohasset needs to continue to have a strong Planning Board and when elected I will work towards this goal.

RECREATION COMMISSION
One Position - Five Years

Richard P. Barrow, 283 King Street

1. Member of the Recreation Commission for the past nine years. Chairman of the Recreation Commission for the past eight years.

As I am running unopposed, I feel that I should not take up time at your meeting. Rather, my time should

MEDI MART DRUGSTORES...ONE OF THE STOP & SHOP COMPANIES

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

As the years whiz by, I've found it fascinating to make a valiant effort to "keep abreast of the times," but after yesterday, I'm afraid it's a losing battle. That's when I discovered the latest vogue is to have your hair painted. There I was in George Bora's salon in North Scituate, while in came a steady stream of teenagers looking more than a little different on the way out. George, the owner of Hair Mates and Zukie, one of his hairdressers, had just returned from the International Hair Styling Show in New York where it would seem that the latest rage is the punk look. Boys and girls alike were making tracks for the newest rage, with hair painted in copper, sapphire, silver, or green, with perhaps a spray of glitter. It's hard to imagine how a parent would react that night at the dinner table. This dish might help them cope.

BARBECUED PORK SHOULDER

1 (3½-4 lb.) pork shoulder roast
1 c. catsup
½ c. firmly packed brown sugar
2 tsp. salt
1 tsp. pepper
1 to 2 T chili powder
¼ c. plus 2 T vinegar
2 T lemon juice
¼ c. Worcestershire sauce
2 tsp. prepared mustard

Cover roast with lightly salted water in large Dutch over. Cover and cook over medium heat 2 to 2½ hours, or until meat is tender. Drain, slice thinly, place in shallow 2 qt. baking dish. Combine next nine ingredients, stirring well. Spoon sauce over sliced roast, turning slices to coat. Bake at 300 degrees for 45 min. Serve on buns if desired. Yield: 6 serving.

New Yorkers are said to be flocking to have their Greenwich Village apartments done by Michael Formica. Many of us who enjoy knotty pine and slipcovers may question the appeal of what he calls "dilapidated charm." Formica's interiors find windows bare or covered with tattered cotton; floors unearpeted and walls bereft of paintings. Sometimes a bare light bulb hangs by a wire cord from the ceiling. The paint appears as if it is peeling from the walls. There are bedrooms without beds, large oriental rugs rolled up and tied with a rope. There are even dining chairs with no table in sight which would make eating a bit of a challenge. I'd much prefer sitting down to a pine trestle table to enjoy this.

CAULIFLOWER-CARROT PIE

3 c. herb-seasoned croutons, crushed
¼ c. butter or margarine, melted
1 medium cauliflower
1 c. finely chopped onion
1 clove garlic, minced
½ c. thinly sliced carrots
¼ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. ground oregano
1 c. (4 oz.) shredded cheddar cheese
2 eggs
¼ c. milk

Combine first two ingredients. Mix well. Press into 9" pieplate. Bake at 375 for 8 min. Set aside. Separate cauliflower into flowerets and quarter them. Melt ¼ c. butter in a skillet. Add cauliflower, onion, garlic, carrots, salt and oregano. Cook over medium heat 10 min., stirring often. Sprinkle ½ c. cheese over crust. Spoon cooked vegetables into shell and top with remaining cheese. Combine eggs and milk. Beat well and pour over pie. Bake at 375 degrees for 35 min.

Some may recall that one's Spring outfit used to feature white gloves and flowers on one's Easter bonnet. Now, fashion decrees that this season's spring color is black. For those who envision themselves in "barrel" skirts, above the knees, or three-tiered dirndles, Saks Fifth Avenue will show them in their spring collections, with prices ranging from $2,000 to $7,500. Just the thing for your weekly food-shopping spree, but you might want to get the makings for these

HONEYDEW FRUIT CUPS

6 c. honeydew balls
2 (15¼ oz.) cans pineapple chunks, drained
Lettuce leaves
1 (8 oz.) carton plain yogurt
¼ c. dry pina colada cocktail mix

Combine honeydew and pineapple. Spoon into lettuce-lined sherbert glasses. Combine yogurt and cocktail mix. Pour over fruit. Four to six servings.

We have Marion Brown to thank for these recipes from a book she lent me called "Southern Living," one of a series of exceptional recipes gathered in eight different volumes.

Living in the country is even better than it used to be. Lots of new comforts have been added—as you'll soon see when you visit The Meadows in Hingham.

This fine group of attached single family homes offers the spaciousness and fine construction of yesteryear with conveniences grandma never even contemplated. There are kitchens with sunny breakfast bays . . . lots of fireplaces . . . vaulted and tray ceilings . . . large private courtyards . . . 2-car garages . . . swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. The location, on wildflower-strewn meadows in the lovely town of Hingham, is idyllic.

Two and three bedroom homes range from $155,000 to $210,000 during our opening period. The furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take Exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment.

WATER COMMISSION
One Position - Three Years

Peter J. Pratt, 75 Ripley Road

1. I have both practical experience and academic training in business management and governmental operations. As a municipally operated utility, the Cohasset Water Department needs managers who have skills gained from both the private and public sectors.

My work in the cable television industry and training in economics allows me to understand the problems of a public utility: cost pressures on the rate base, capital development needs, and adequate rates of return on investment.

Past experience and training in the political process allows me to analyze the important issues of state and federal grantsmanship, regional water resource planning, and environmental protection. I look forward to using my working relationships with our current state administration and congressional delegation for the benefit of Cohasset.

2. The size of the Cohasset Water Department's treatment plant and reservoir system presents us with a series of problems and, simultaneously, with our best opportunity to return the Department to its former status as a self-sustaining entity.

Completed in 1978 at a capital cost of $2.84 million, our treatment plant and reservoir was engineered to serve the Town with a peak daily capacity of 3 million gallons. Currently, peak flows reach 1.3 million gallons during the summer. Average daily consumption is about 700,000 gallons.

The Department's financial problems are immediately recognized by any business manager — over capacity.

I have proposed a three point plan to solve this problem of over capacity and its allied problems of high customer rates and mounting deficits:

(1) Establishment of a well planned and profit making program of wholesaling water into surrounding towns.

(2) Enactment of a capital austerity program held in place until operating revenues increase.

(3) Development of a five-year business management plan to control long-term production needs, manage costs, and expand revenues.

Anthony P. Fasciano, 3 Bound Brook Lane

Candidate did not respond to questionnaire.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE
Two Positions - Three Years

Diana D. Kornet, 29 Nichols Road

1. Four years of experience on the School Committee provide the most help performing the duties of this office. Moreover, having taught sixth grade science before we began our family, I have been a part of school life on the inside, too. As a mother of four, with three children currently in the system, I am vitally concerned with maintaining the quality of public education.

Before the current P.S.O. was formed, I participated in the Communication Councils and Co-Chaired the Osgood Council one year. As well as volunteering at our children's grade levels, I have helped teach the Mainstreaming Sensitivity Program since its inception; served on the Committee To Create a New Teacher Evaluation Instrument, the Committee to Revise the Goals and Objectives of our High School Education for the Ten Year Accreditation Review, several negotiation sub-committees, and have been Secretary and Chairman of the School Committee.

The most important quality I bring to the job is an attempt to be open-minded and fair about each issue which confronts the Committee.

2. Clearly, the most significant problem in the coming years is how to maintain Cohasset's high standards of education and the excellent "product" of our system in the face of the financial constraints of Proposition 2½. Ironically, the decline in enrollment has helped us live within these limitations; there would have been no way we could comply with the voter mandate had the school population remained the same. But voters should realize that the School Department has been "cutting the fat" out of its budget for at least six years, and we are down to the skeleton. It is time to decide whether a fine education is worth offering our young people, or whether it is no longer important. Before you make that decision, may I suggest to you that having the reputation of an excellent school system benefits not only those of us with school age children, but every property owner in the town.

The decline in enrollment also provides the greatest challenge in the next few years. We have the opportunity to be innovative as we strive to preserve the flexibility of a good curriculum; to meet the needs of all of our students should remain our primary goal.

John F. Langmaid, III, 90 Beechwood Street

1. By law, the School Committee has charge of all public schools, determines policy, sets budget priorities, appoints personnel, approves courses and textbooks, plans school services, evaluates the educational program, and negotiates with teachers and other staff under the collective bargaining law. The School Committee serves as an advocate for public education in the community. The individual member should be willing and able to carry out all these duties, spend the time necessary to make informed decisions, and possess personal qualities of common sense, fair and openmindedness, and a sense of humor. I have been involved with Cohasset schools since 1973, first as a classroom volunteer and member of the Joseph Osgood Communications Council. For the past six years, I have been a member of the School Committee and have served as Secretary, Vice-Chairman, and Chairman. I have served on negotiating subcommittees of the Board.

I am proud of the Cohasset School system — its students and graduates continue to achieve recognition in a variety of fields from academics to music and the arts to atheltics. I believe my experience and personal qualities have contributed to our successes, and I would be honored to be given the opportunity to continue.

2. I see three areas where improvements should be made.

(1) I would like the committee to pull together in support of the public schools. There should be full discussion and then dissemination of all important ideas and proposals. After the vote, the full committee should endorse the majority view.

(2) We need to make a greater effort to educate the public about the benefits of supporting a first class public education.

(3) Our goal should be to maintain a public school system that is responsive to a diverse student population, which by its qualities and accomplishments has the enthusiastic support of the town.

Judy Volungis, 234 Forest Avenue

1. Over the past several years I have been involved in the Cohasset Public School System and the community through several organizations.

For three years I was a representative to the Osgood School Communication Council, serving as Community Resource Chairman. I have also served as a Classroom Volunteer (five years), a Room Mother and a Field Trip Chaperone. This year I represent the Deer Hill School on the Arts Enrichment Committee of the P.S.O. and serve as an I.M.S. Math Volunteer in the fourth grade.

In all of my various roles I have been involved on behalf of the schools as a promoter, innovator, problem solver and as an advocate. I believe I have been successful in all these roles.

My professional background is as follows: I hold a B.A. in Government from the University of Mass/Amherst, an M.Ed. in Elementary Education from Worcester State College, with several post-graduate hours.

In addition to my educational training, I have nine years of active teaching experience in the elementary grades and also have trained and evaluated student teachers from several colleges. For the past six years I have served as Secretary-Treasurer of Vol. Inc., and have managed the accounting and record-keeping for this Corporation. I am Treasurer for the Community Garden Club of Cohasset; and a former Director of the Cohasset Community Center.

2. I see significant opportunities available for dealing with a large number of problems which the school administration is faced with as a result of the state's substantial reduction of its commitment to secondary education. Inflation and unemployment and Prop. 2½ have signaled a prolonged period of recession. Accordingly, Cohasset Public Schools must expand its vision and redefine its mission. As someone who has toiled in the vineyards, so to speak, I have a unique respect for both the boldness of the journey and the direction in which public education must travel.

Any efforts which are made on behalf of public education in the 1980's are going to depend largely on friendships made in the public sector and accountability from the school administration and committee. The School Committee of the future must be sensitive to the needs of both the educational community and the voter, accommodating the interests and needs of both for the benefit of all. A determined course of action and a commitment must be made. A reduction in student numbers must be dealt with at all educational levels. Goals must be established.

I view the responsibilities of the office of school committeeman as triplefold: maintaining high academic standards, achieving financial stability,

Angler's corner . . .

By Greg Derr

By the calendar it is officially spring and being spring, it's fishing season...time to dust off the rods and refill the reel with new mono.

This is also the first week of the Mariner's weekly fishing column to be written by yours truly. The purpose of this column is to provide an "idea" of fishing conditions, methods and club news to the angler, be he a novice or a seasoned veteran.

I'll try to provide two lists of fish than can be caught locally and some methods to help you catch them; one list will be devoted to salt water gamefish and the other to freshwater. I will also like to provide space for any news about clubs, tournaments and fishing clinics, etc.

Please send all fishing news to "The Anglers' Corner," Mariner Newspapers, Box 682, Marshfield, Mass. 02050. We'll be happy to print any news of unusual catches or any tips you might want to share with fellow anglers.

FRESHWATER

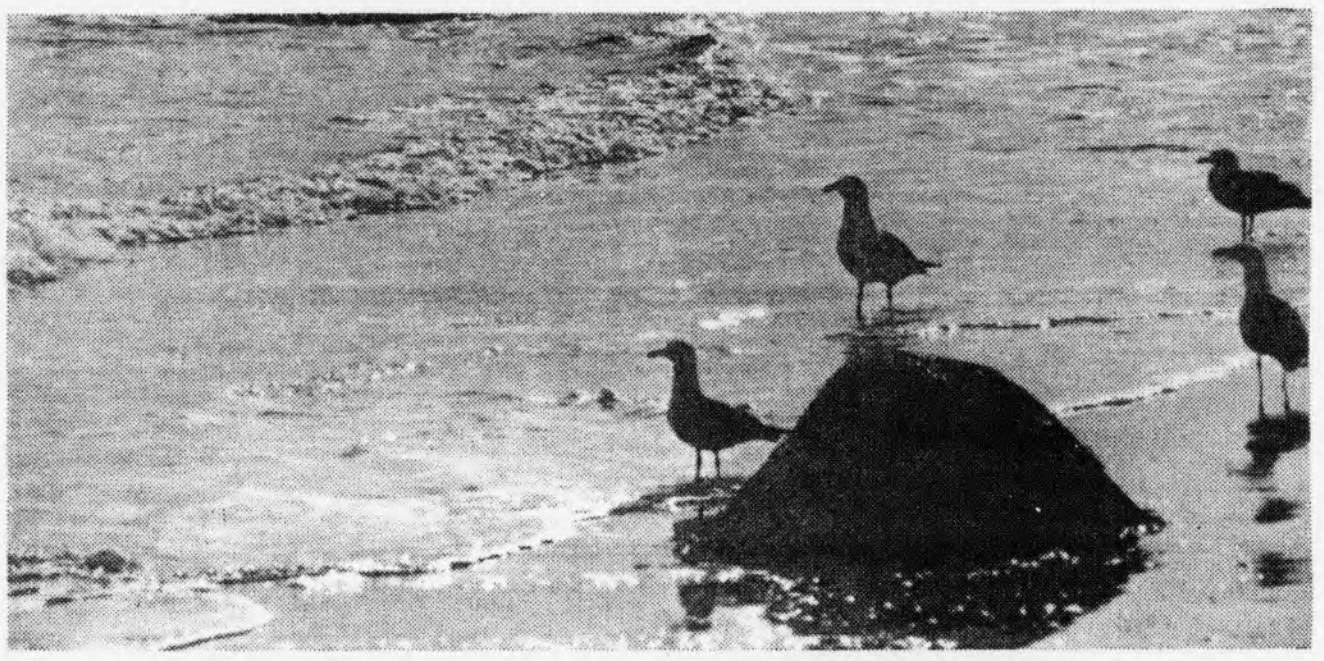
April is traditionally trout month in freshwater and this year seems to be the best in the last five years; the state Division of Fish and Wildlife has already stocked all ponds in the area with extra large trout this year.

Long Pond in Plymouth is filled with eager brown brook and rainbow trout, most are much larger than fish stocked in earlier years. A week ago fish were being caught on salmon eggs, worms, corn and on grubs. These baits should be fished on the bottom. Al's Goldfish seems to be the favorite local lure. Fish it slowly on the bottom. Small silver and gold spinners produce fish also.

Little Pond, Plymouth, is producing well. Streams should be stocked within the week with brookies. Trout streams include the South River, Marshfield, Indian Head River in Hanover, Wier River in Hingham, Third Herring Brook in Norwell, Bound Brook in Scituate and the Jones River in Kingston.

These are just a few spots where trout can be caught on spinning and fly fishing tackle. When fly fishing, try about a no. 10 nymph casting upstream and letting the fly drift on the bottom where trout are holding. Warmer weather triggers hatches of flying stoneflies and mayflies.

Herring have started to show up in tidal streams and shad will soon follow in about two to three weeks.



SALTWATER

Now is the time to take advantage of the cold water and warm days by fishing the surf for rock cod; this is traditionally the only time in the year when cod are readily available from the beach jetties and bridges.

Cod hang in close to shore looking for uncovered seaclams. When fishing from the beach, use one or two rods casting a "Scotchman's" rig baited with seaclams beyond the breaking waves, let the clams sit on the bottom, sending their scent through the water.

On a 12 to 20 pound test tackle, the cod is a tough fighter. Some local hot spots to try are Black Rock Beach, Cohasset (good for pollock also), Minot and Egypt Beach, Scituate, the mouth of the North River, Humarock Beach, brant Rock jetty, Duxbury Beach.

Spring flounder should start to be showing up in the harbors like Duxbury and Hingham. Bottom fishing with seaworms is the most productive way to catch these finicky eaters.

Mariner Photographer Greg Derr said these gulls were scanning the surf for breakfast when he shot them. That's as opposed to lunch or supper and they shopped Brant Rock shores.

Town meeting briefs . . .

"STRONG CHIEF" REJECTED

Voters feel the current system of maintaining control of the police chief through selectmen should remain. An article calling for a "Strong Police Chief" was defeated by a voice vote. The article, if passed, meant the chief could set his own rules and regulations and enforce them without political interference from selectmen.

CIVIL SERVICE DENIED

With only one or two voice approvals, the call to restore the position of police chief to Civil Service status was emphatically rejected. This means newly appointed Chief Joe Kealey will be the permanent chief but under the jurisdiction of selectmen who will review his status in three years.

Selectmen strongly urged the article's defeat citing Kealey's record and the problems between the town and the state Civil service agency. Former Chief John DeBassio also urged the article's defeat.

NO WIND GENERATORS

Voters rejected the planning board article calling for establishing wind energy conversion systems under a permit process from the zoning board of appeals. Hiller Zobel of Jerusalem Raod warned voters about the generator's height and its impact of the ocean view. William Montuori also warned about the impact of the generators on television and radio interference.

NORTH COHASSET FIRE STATION REMAINS

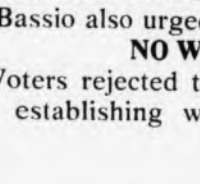
Former Executive Secretary Arthur Clark asked that Article 25 permitting the selectmen to sell the North Cohasset Fire Station be withdrawn. This came after the advisory board explained the building is used to store equipment for the tree and park and highway depts. The committee does plan to expend funds to repair the former station.

Public Notice

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS PROBATE COURT
Norfolk, ss.
No. 79F0617-E1
NOTICE OF FIDUCIARY'S ACCOUNT

To all persons interested in the estate of George G. Crocker late of Cohasset, in said County, deceased.

You are hereby notified pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 72 that the First through Third accounts of State Street Bank and Trust Company as Executor of the will of said deceased has been presented to said Court for allowance.



If you desire to preserve your right to file an objection to said accounts, you or your attorney must file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before the 20th day of April, 1983, the return day of this citation. You may upon written request by registered or certified mail to the fiduciary, or to the attorney for the fiduciary, obtain without cost a copy of said accounts. If you desire to object to any item of said accounts, you must, in addition to filing a written appearance as aforesaid, file within 30 days after said return day or within such other time as the Court upon motion may order a written statement of each such item together with the grounds for each objection thereto, a copy to be served upon the fiduciary pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 5.

WITNESS, Robert M. Ford, Esquire, First Judge of said Court, this 25th day of March 1983.

determining job trends and making a continued reassessment of the job market.

I know how education works. I think it can work better.

BOARD OF HEALTH
One Position - Three Years

Barbara A. Kern, 111 Atlantic Avenue

1. I bring a background of environmental law and planning courses at the Lincoln Filene Center at Tufts, and my years of observing the meetings of the Cohasset Board of Health. I bring my two years as an elected member of the Board, one of which is as Chairwoman. I have attended seminars and workshops on hazardous waste, groundwater, protection and health affiars on a continuing basis. I am President of the Massachusetts Association of Health Boards. This job gives me the unique opportunity to bring to Cohasset the knowledge gained from a statewide organization. I am aware of solutions found by other towns to problems which Cohasset may have. I meet state officials and experts in all areas of health related fields who may be of help. I spend some time each week in the Cohasset Board of Health Office, so that I am aware of the day to day happenings, and I am available in Town when needed.

2. Problems which need to be dealt with are the ongoing operation of the Cedar Street landfill. Although the expansion area is now in use, there is continuing management to be considered. There is the problem of what to do when the landfill area runs out. The Dump Study Committee is looking into alternatives, and the Board of Health must work closely with them.

Cohasset has its first cluster zone development under way, with approval from the Board of Health. This is a new concept for the Town and will need continuing cooperation during the construction. Depending on the course the Town takes with its plans for sewers, the Board of Health will be involved and concerned.

Opportunities — In these days of 2½ there is an opportunity and need to bring about more citizen involvement and cooperation with Boards.

For instance, I have just initiated the setting up of a Hazardous Materials Committee to report to the Board of Health. There are opportunities to draw upon interest and expertise of the members for the benefit of the Town. Opportunities are limited only by the hours in the day.

Lawrence J. Mitchell, 271 North Main Street

1. I am a candidate for the Board of Health because I believe the Board needs and does not have now the type of practical, down to earth experience that I can provide. As an independent plumbing contractor and a plumbing and gas inspector for the Town, I have 20 years experience in finding practical solutions to some of the major concerns of the Board, namely, the safe operation of septic systems and the handling of waste disposal.

2. I don't have instant answers to the serious problem of the dump, but I do believe the Board could use my experience to the advantage of the Town. I know the Town and its people; I know about septic systems installation and operation; I have run a business and supervised employees; I am used to dealing with suppliers, contractors and other businessmen; and I am right here in Town every day.

TRUSTEES OF COHASSET
FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY
Three Positions - Three Year Term

Richard A. Dabrowski, 46 Black Rock Road

1. I have long had an interest in libraries and their function in terms of community service. I have been a member of the Board of Trustees of a library in another state.

2. The high quality of service already afforded the Town of Cohasset by the Paul Pratt Library, and the sustained effort to improve the service, reach more people, and provide better books are admirable accomplishments, and deserve to be encouraged and supported. These are some of the important reasons I ask for your vote.

I pledge, if elected, to support the work of the Board of Trustees and the services designed to attract children, students, and adults.

Barbara M. Power, 74 Beach Street

1. The experience of having served three terms as a library trustee has given me some insights into the problems of running the library. I have tried to supplement that knowledge by keeping as current in general library technology.

2. The problem of the most significance at the moment is financing the increased demand on the library with a level funded budget. The kinds of automation and regionalization which are projected to keep current with the state of the art suggest eventual large capital expenditures.

Lucia Woods, 231 Jerusalem Road

1. Three years experience is my most valuable qualification.

2. Opportunities: (1) Computerization of the regional libraries; (2) Cable T.V.

Problems: The budget; cost of books is rising.

Conway tops office sales

The Conway Cohasset office had sales approaching $2.5 million for March. This tops all 26 Jack Conway offices for the past 25 years for monthly sales, according to office manager Muriel Desmond.

Sales were in Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell, Hanover, Duxbury, Pembroke and Kingston and included two condominiums valued at $130,000 each.

Desmond gave special credit to Gloria Ellis for her efforts towards achieving this new record.

☐The newly-formed New England Aquarium Council holds its first major benefit the weekend of April 30 to May 1.

Highlights of the two-day program are a symposium on "Whales, Seabirds, and Oceans" to be conducted by a group of world-renowned marine conservationists; a gala dinner-dance at the Aquarium, located on Boston's historic waterfront, and a whale-watching expedition off the coast of Cape Cod.

Peggy Dray and Marie Hartnett Leary serve on the Council's benefit committee.

The New England Aquarium Council was organized as a volunteer group with the purposes of increasing community awareness and understanding of the Aquarium and to provide supplemental financial assistance.

The afternoon symposium with regional commentators Dr. Gerard Bertrand, president of the Massachusetts Audubon Society; Dr. Evelyn Murphy, secretary of economic development and manpower affairs, and John Prescott, executive director of the New England Aquarium, will take place at the Boston Park Plaza Castle, beginning at 1 p.m.

FOCUS ON A NEW YOU THROUGH COLOR

On Saturday, April 9, from 11 AM to 4 PM color consultant Linda Grillo will be at Anne Corey to help you discover how to use your own palette of colors to make your wardrobe, hair color, makeup and accessories just right for you. She'll show you how wearing the correct colors can help you look healthy and fit, accent your strengths and contribute to a successful appearance. At 1 PM there will be a demonstration showing a complete skin, eye and hair analysis. Color swatches will be used in assessing correct color choices in makeup and clothing.

POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENT

A LETTER from Candidate Sullivan

Dear Voters,
My campaign for political office as your Selectman is drawing to a close. This Saturday, April 9, from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. each of you will travel to town hall to cast your votes. Naturally, I would be grateful for your support, but no matter whom you choose, I wanted to thank each of you for the warm reception I have received throughout the campaign.

This has been an enriching experience for me. I have learned much and made many new friends. I have enjoyed the opportunity to speak out on the issues.

No matter what the outcome of this election may be, my commitment to Cohasset will not diminish. Once again, thank you.

Sincerely

Diane Sullivan

Scituate's LeVangie named Coach of the Year

John LeVangie of 67 Indian Trail, North Scituate, was named Basketball Coach of the Year by the Boston Globe.

LeVangie is the coach of Boston College High School which is Division I of the Massachusetts High School Interscholastic Athletic Association.

Five years ago, he coached for two years in Cohasset and led the Skippers to a 17 victory season and to the semifinals of the Division III Basketball Tournament.

Two years ago, B.C. High won the Southern Division of the Division I State Tournament but lost in the finals to Cambridge Rindge and Latin which then had Pat Ewing, now playing basketball for Georgetown and considered a premier professional basketball prospect.

This year, LeVangie coached B.C. High to a 19-4 record and to the finals in the Division I state Tournament. The team lost by one point to Brookline, 69-68.

Baseball, softball open at CHS

By John Ryan

Spring is here and even before the first robin of the year is viewed, the Cohasset varsity baseball team is geared to bring excitement to the Milliken Field diamond under the tutelage of coach Tom Burnell (who earlier brought his Cohasset High hockey team to the state tournament).

The opening game occurs April 6 with the Skippers hosting Hanover, in what is expected to be a highly contested game. Senior Bob Meers is the expected starting pitcher. He enjoyed a fine season last year on the mound, leading the Skippers in E.R.A. and was most valuable with the bat.

His battery-mate Bill Cuff, also a senior, is perhaps the most intimidating catcher in the league and hopes to also have a successful season at the plate. Rounding out the infield, sophomore Lee Ried starts at third base. Senior Jack Maloney at short-stop, junior Chris Kuhn the scrappy second-baseman, and either junior Dave Barcomb or freshman Kevin Quilty at first-base.

The speedy outfielding unit consists of Mark Gunville, Bob Meers, Pat Broderick, and John Ryan, all of whom are seniors and are experienced in keeping the opposition from scoring runs.

Unlike the Boston Red Sox, this 1983 CHS baseball team is guaranteed not to fold in September, since the season ends in early June.

Members of the J.V. Boys Baseball team are: B. Wetzell, D. Ormiston, T. Carroll, T. Jones, J. Daniels, J. Contis, P. Corbett, T. Fitzpatrick, P. Mahoney, T. Henry, B. McKenna, G. Ferreira, J. Connoly, J. Roy, and T. Campbell.

Members of the Varsity Boys Baseball team are: B. Meers, J. Maloney, P. Broderick, J.T. Ryan, M. Gunville, B. Cuff, D. Barcomb, C. Kuhn, S. Davis, D. Stover, J. O'Neill, K. Quilty, L. Reid and T. Campbell.

VARSITY GIRLS SOFTBALL TEAM

Last year's varsity softball team won the league championship and advanced to the quarterfinals of the state tournament. Unfortunately, all but two of those starters have graduated.

Returning for the Skippers are seniore captain Gia Baressi and sophmore Janet DiGirolamo.

Baressi, a league all-star, will play second base and catcher. DiGirolamo captains the outfield at center field.

Starting for Cohasset are Caroline Zwicker, pitcher; Lisa Shumaker, catcher; Beverly Mullaney, first base; Gia Beressi, second base; Kim Wittet, short-stop; Lily Carbone, third base; Tara Stanford, outfield; Janet DeGirolamo, outfield; and Sarah Seavey, outfield.

Coach Fallon is looking at this season as a rebuilding season. "The team is young and inexperienced; we should become more competitive by mid season."

In pre-season action, the Skippers scrimmaged Hingham and Scituate. Coach Fallon praised Baressi and DiGirolamo for their efforts.

The girls start off their season this week with league games at Hanover and Sacred Heart of Kingston.

Members of the J.V. Girls Softball team are: D. Potolicchio, N. Conant, V. Spooner, P. Ainslie, J. Nedrow, A. Barrow, B. Cox, K. Anderson; A. O'Leary, M. Cahill, M. O'Leary, S. Riley, K. McNeill, K. Kirkendall, D. Hartley, M. Murphy, C. Spooner, M. Nedrow, A. Duncombe and E. O'Leary, manager.

Members of the Varsity Girls Softball team are: G. Baressi, K. Wittet, J. DiGirolamo, B. Mullaney, C. Lucas, L. Shumaker, S. Brown, K. O'Brien, L. Carbone, K. Isuele, J. Hoogeveen, F. Standford, S. Seavey, T. Standford and C. Zwicker.

Evelyn B. Wood Library fund established

A gift of $1,000 in memory of Evelyn B. Wood was made to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library by Mrs. and Mrs. F. Gregg Bemis of Cohasset and Concord.

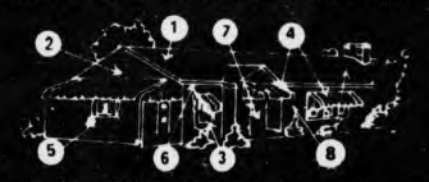
The Bemises expressed their wish for a substantial memorial to Evelyn Wood (1915-1983), who for 32 years was children's librarian and assistant librarian at the Paul Pratt Library. She resigned in 1981 due to illness, but continued at the library as a volunteer as her health permitted.

The Bemises said they believed others will want to honor Evelyn Wood and her many contributions to the town and the library by gifts to the Evelyn B. Wood Fund.

David Chittim, chairman of the library trustees, said the library's greatest need is to increase the income from endowment funds to offset costs of books and services while the town can only level-fund the library.

Library director Richard Hayes said the Evelyn B. Wood Fund will be noted with a permanent plaque on the wall of the library. He said the fund will be used to purchase needed books, equipment and services approved by the trustees as a memorial to Evelyn Wood.

Mrs. Maurice McLoughlin, president of the Friends of the Cohasset Library, said she thought the Friends of the Library would like to contribute to the fund, and will propose it at their next meeting.



Cohasset Jewelers appointed

Cohasset Jewelers was appointed an authorized dealer in this area for Lenox China, dinnerware, crystal and gift items.

The arrangement to feature Lenox China dinnerware and crystal, and a wide selection of gift items, is in line with the store's policy of making the best-known brand name merchandise available to its customers at all times, Mr. and Mrs. Cirone, owners of Cohasset Jewelers said.

Travel Along with

Evie Young
Britain now boasts of a cultural complex that is on a par with the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. The Barbican Centre for Arts and Conferences, in London, is the magnificent home of the illustrious Royal Shakespeare Company which performs in a 1200-seat threaer. The sculptural Barbican Hall is the residence of the London Symphony Orchestra. The large, balconied Barbican Theater features major productions while the smaller "pit" theater is the setting for experimental works. Art galleries, glass canopies, a library, promenades, fountains, bars, restaurants an buffets all make the Barbican a cultural city within a cultural city — further reason to visit London.
AT COLPITTS TRAVEL CENTER, your individual travel needs are professionally and expediciously met by a staff of trained travel advisors. It is our endeavor to offer you guidance and assistance in traveling across the state, country or world. Travel is our business, our only business and we think we do it better. You will find us located at 3 Brook St., Scituate. Most major credit cards are honored. We are open to serve you 9-5 Mon-Fri; 10-4 Sat and by appointment. Tel. 545-4500 or 383-1717.
TRAVEL TIP
Barbican, just outside the walls of the city of London, links with bus and subway lines and features a huge parking lot.

Library Information Line...

The libraries in Cohasset, Marshfield and Scituate are providing this column on questions asked at the libraries and on new information sources acquired. This week the column is written by Shirley Niswander, adult services librarian of the Scituate Town Library.

Q. What is the significance or symbolism of the grasshopper weathervane on Faneuil Hall?

A. There are numerous references in the library to Peter Faneuil, Faneuil Hall and the famous grasshopper weathervane. "Freedom by the Bay" by William Schofield contains an interesting account of Peter Faneuil who was born in New Rochelle, New York in 1700. He inherited a prosperous Boston mercantile business from his father and a considerable fortune from his uncle. He had also accumulated substantial wealth for himself in foreign trade and shipping, all of which combined to make Peter one of Boston's foremost entrepreneurs.

Realizing the need for a marketplace in Boston, he built the building in 1740 and donated it to the city. It gained fame in pre-Revolutionary times a a site for town meetings, one of which led to the Boston Tea Party. It also served as a forum for John Hancock, Samuel Adams and other figures well known in our early American history. Ironically, the first public use of the Hall was for a memorial service in honor of Peter who died in 1743.

"Old Landmarks and Historic Personages of Boston," by Samuel Adams Drake, states, "A grasshopper, which still decorates the vane, made by that cunning artificer, Deacon Shem Drowne, was long thought to be the crest of the Faneuils; especially as a similar insect adorned the vane of the summer house on Tremont Street. But the arms were extant not many years ago on some of Peter Faneuil's plate in the possession of his descendants, and disproved this theory. No better reason has been assigned for the adoption of the grasshopper than that it was an imitation of the vane of the Royal Exchange in London."

Ralph Waldo Emerson had his own explanation for the grasshopper. He once pointed out that a grasshopper's ability to slip from one ignominious form into another form equally ignominious was symbolic of the nature of many politicians who have ranted and raved in the Faneuil Hall Forum.

"Freedom by the Bay" describes the events surrounding the mysterious disappearance of the grasshopper during the 1973 Christmas season. By this time the weathervane was valued at $300,000 and police launched an all-points search throughout New England and nearby states. By January 8 they made contact with a steeplejack under arrest on a narcotics charge, who gave them information about the grasshopper. His tip led a search party to scale a series of tall ladders to a point high inside the Faneuil Hall belfry where they found the missing item, hidden under a pile of old flags. The recovery story led the city's television newscasts that night and all good Bostonians approved

Q. Of what material is the basketball hoop backboard made and what are its official dimensions?

A. "Rules of the Game" by the Diagram Group, states, "The backboards are made of hardwood or a single piece of equally rigid transparent material with lines and edges to contrast with the background — usually black on white or white on transparent. The official dimensions of the backboard are five feet eleven inches by three feet eleven inches."

Q. How long has the fountain pen been in use and who invented the pencil-eraser combination?

A. "A Volume of Things," published by Hawthorne Books refers to Samuel Pepys, the diarist, who recorded in 1663 that he used a "reservoir" pen. That was 320 years ago. "The People's Almanac" by David Wallechinsky and Irving Wallace gives Lewis E. Waterman as the inventor of the fountain pen in 1884 and adds, "The first patent for a continuously flowing fountain pen was issued in 1830 to one D. Hyde of Reading, Pennsylvania. But it was Waterman who constructed a practical, workable fountain pen. His own firm manufactured these earliest handmade pens two hundred being produced in 1885. Later Waterman developed a machine to turn out pens en masse."

"What's What" by David Fisher and Reginald Bragonier, Jr. shows a diagram of the fountain pen as well as the ballpoint pen and pencil with an eraser. The pencil with an eraser ("People's Almanac") was invented by Hyman L. Lipman in 1858. Until the advent of Lipman, people used separate erasers when writing, drawing and figuring. This Philadelphian conceived the simple idea of combining pencil and eraser in one. His invention offered a pencil with a groove on top into which a piece of prepared rubber was glued. He sold his patent for $100,000." The United States can take credit for both Lipman and the pencil and Waterman and the pen.

Q. What is the meaning of the word "flapjack" and what is the first reference to it?

A. "The Oxford Universal Dictionary" defines a flapjack as "a pancake; also an apple turnover." "The Glossary of Words, Phrases, Names and Allusions" takes us back to Pericles who was born about 429 B.C. Pericles said, "We'll have flesh for holydays, fish for fasting-days and moreo'er puddings and flapjacks."

Q. Was there ever an Indian war in Scituate?

A. From material compiled by William T. Sherman in the collection of the Scituate Historical Society there is evidence that indeed there was an Indian war in Scituate May 20, 1676 at the stockade of Charles Stockbridge. It followed by two months, a bloody battle led by the Sagamore and Canonchett at the Providence Plantations in which a small band of Scituate men lost their lives. The Indians eventually arrived at the Stockbridge stockade where most of the town residents made their stand. The savage attack lasted for over seven hours. Losses were great in men, houses and newly planted crops and the small town of Scituate was "nearly wiped from the fact of the earth."

Advanced portraiture class

The South Shore Art Center's advanced portraiture class taught by Constance Pratt has been postponed one week. It will begin Tuesday, April 19 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

Several other classes begin the week of April 11. These include Clement Micarelli's intermediate and advanced portraiture. David Tandy's introductory drawing and introductory painting and Rosalind Farbush's drawing and painting workshop. All classes meet at the Center, 103 Ripley Road.

The Micarelli class begins Tuesday, April 12, 7:15-10:15 p.m.; the two Tandy classes meet simultaneously beginning Thursday, April 14, 7:15-10:15 p.m.; and the Farbush class starts Wednesday, April 13, 12:30 to 3 p.m.

For information and registration, call the Center, 383-9548. Advance registration is required for all classes.

Obituaries

Thomas Johnson

Thomas Clinton Johnson, 84, husband of Evelyn (Blaney) Johnson of 37 Stanton Road, died March 26.

He was the father of Richard Phillips Johnson of Nashua, N.H., brother of Dr. Robert K. Johnson of Cranston, Rhode Island and Howard R. Johnson of Lyndonville, Vermont and the late Marilla Eggleston, formerly of Beverly.

He also leaves three grandchildren.

Mr. Johnson was a U.S. Army Veteran of World War I.

Services were held March 30 in the First Parish Unitarian Church of Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the church, 23 North Main St., Cohasset 02025. Burial was private.

Mary Sullivan

Mary Josephine (Healy) Sullivan, 90, a self-employed insurance broker, active until two years ago, and the first woman to get her driver's license in the town of Brookline, died March 29 at the Milton Health Care Facility in Milton.

She was born and educated in Brookline and lived there most of her life. She had lived in Wellesley and in Cohasset for the past several years.

She was owner of the Mary J. Sullivan Insurance Company in Chestnut Hill for 60 years, and also operated the business from her homes in Wellesley and in Cohasset until her retirement at 89.

She was a communicant of St. Anthony's Parish.

Wife of the late Thomas Francis Sullivan, she leaves two sons, Thomas F. Sullivan of Wellesley and Joseph J. Sullivan of Needham; two daughters, Mary E. Cullen of Wellesley and Barbara A. Chase of Cohasset; a brother, William A. Healy of Concord, N.H.; four sisters, Mona Leonard of California, Caroline Healy of Arlington, Elizabeth Miller of Waltham and Alice Sullivan of Cambridge; 25 grandchildren and 11 great-grandchildren. She was also the mother of the late Lt. Gen. John W. O'Neill, USAF.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Monday in St. Anthony's Church. Burial was in Holyhood Cemetery, Brookline.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Glastonbury Abby, 16 Hull St., Hingham 02043.

Harringtons, Kimballs get tentative okay to expand

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Harrington's (formerly The Greenhouse) and Kimball's Motel were given tentative approval for their dining expansion programs by the sewer commission in unanimous votes recently.

The commission had earlier said public use of Kimball's Restaurant would invalidate their sewer permit.

Both restaurants plan to use water saving devices to avoid water flow increases.

Stephen Harrington said he plans to expand into the former Mona Friel's Beauty Salon area, and remodel to seat 60 guests in a new function room. He said the functions would include weddings and receptions, "but it is not a dining room or lounge".

Harrington's seats 58 diners on the first floor which features "french service," and 51 patrons on the second floor at the bar and tables, for a total accomodation of 109 seats. The maximum total flow would be 5,915 gallons per day from all areas, including kitchen and lavatories. Harrington's holding tank has a 8,000 gallon capacity.

The commissioners said after inspection of the sewer system is completed by the chief operator, if the system is found to be satisfactory, a permit will be issued for the planned May 1 completion. The commissioners also recommended that Harrington's use water saving devices.

The Roy family, members Mary, John and Peter, owners of Kimball's Motor Inn, attended the sewer meeting with their attorney Charles Humphreys and their engineer, Fred DeFeo of E.J. Flynn Engineers.

DeFeo said, "Instead of using Title 5 estimates for sewage flow which are 'understandably high' because they were developed for subsurface sewage disposal, he used figures from 'Wastewater Engineering' by Metcalf and Eddy as a basis of his figures for flows applicable to the proper operation of a municipal sewerage system." He also deducted lawn watering and pool evaporation from the water consumption data for the motel.

DeFeo also proposed to install toilet tank inserts, faucet aerators and low flow shower heads. He said manufacturers claim a 40 percent reduction in water use for individual units.

The commissioners agreed that if DeFeo's recommendations were followed, the motel would not violate the sewer ban. The commissioners also agreed since the motel has a 3,457 gallon capacity grease trap, there would be no obstacle as far as flow or water quality to the motel opening its dining room to the public to serve 125 people on a rotating basis of five seatings per day.

ROBERT FESLER

Robert Fesler, owner of the property between 35 and 39 South Main Street, where Village Fabrics and The Red Balloon are now located, attended a recent commission meeting and announced plans for two additions to the building.

He showed sketches of a proposed addition to the rear, and one to be built later extending the front of the building nearer the street.

The sewer commissioners advised him that they would not rule on the projects until he submitted engineering data regarding the projected flows and quality of the effluent.

Fesler said he would give up the sump pump, if allowed the addition. He alleged that there were several other village buildings with sump pumps connected to the sewer mains.

Sump pumps connected to the sewer mains are illegal.

Fesler said that if such existing conditions were corrected much of the infiltration problems suffered by the present plant in heavy rains would be eliminated.

League meeting April 12, 14

National defense and arms control will be discussed by the League of Women Voters April 12 and 14.

PSO sets date for family portraits

Robin Suhrbier, fundraising chairman for the Cohasset PSO, has set the date for family portraits, Sunday, May 1. An innovation this year is the inclusion of family pets. "We wouldn't dream of a family portrait without our dog," said Robin. So special arrangements have been made with O'Connor Studios to include mascots.

Pictures will be taken at the Deer Hill School. Fliers will be sent home Friday with Osgood and Deer Hill children. Others are asked to call Robin directly for details (383-0349). Sign-ups for the 11 x 14" protraits will be taken at Town Hall on Election Day, Saturday, April 9, and families will be personally contacted for appointments. A small portion of the proceeds goes to the PSO to support their activities.

Surplus town water studied . . .

Cohasset changed the method of collecting late water payments about two years ago. Auditor James Kearney, C.P.A., said since delinquencies were then added to property tax bills as a lien, "the net result is that water charges can be outstanding as long as 16 months without incurring penalty (interest charges)."

Signorelli said that under the lien system, the water department received the principal, but the town retained the interest on the overdue accounts.

Under the new system, after 90 days, the water department charges and receives 14 percent interest, the maximum allowable under state law. But the delinquencies are not added to the tax bills.

However, because of slow payments, the water department has had to threaten and even make shut-offs to speed collections. Signorelli and Flint disagree as to whether the old or new collection system may be better in speeding payments.

Water commissioner Lot Bates pointes out that sending two men out to locate and turn off the valve results in labor costs, which may not be recouped under the $10 turn-on fee presently charged.

In some cases due to intervention through the board of health, the water has to be turned on again in 24 hours.

Flint's assistant, Nancy Snowdale, said she notices an improvement in collections when the water department occasionally hires part-time clerical help, and frees the water department secretary, Betty Maree, to make telephone calls and send notices to delinquents.

Even more serious may be distribution problems revealed in the 1980 S.E.A. engineering firm evaluation of the existing system. They recommended that the water department spend $4,871,250 within about 15 years in three stages, with $1,907 million to be spent before 1985.

Their first recommendation was for a leak detection study. This was done, and Bates said a leak was found on Atlantic Ave. at Cunningham's Bridge which "was pouring 28,000 gallons daily into the ocean." It was subsequently corrected.

Water Commissioner Montuori said that the Hingham Water Co. "does not want to buy our surplus water." The only way would be if the legislature created a North Scituate, Minot-Cohasset Water District, he added. Water Commissioner Chairman Robert Jackson pointed out that there is no meter or back pressure valve at the South Main St. Cohasset-Scituate line, although there are hookups and shutoffs for emergency use.

Officials say that Scituate requested Cohasset sell them water as recently as last summer, but before negotiations on price, metering and back pressure problems were solved, there was a rain which alleviated Scituate's drought.

Since Cohasset and Scituate use nearly the same pressures, a sudden drop in Cohasset's pressure due to firefighting, for example, might cause water to flow backward from Scituate without a valve.

Sewer commission candidates Peter Pratt and Anthony Fasciano agree that the Cohasset Water Department faces many serious problems. They differ on selling water and on meter reading.

Fasciano said he would sell water to other towns, but only on an emergency basis for perhaps as long as three months. Pratt wants a cost-effectiveness and feasibility study on selling water to Scituate, Marshfield or other water short municipalities on the South Shore until Cohasset's population catches up with its surplus "perhaps by 1990."

Fasciano wants to investigate contracting out meter reading and put personnel to work fixing leaks, and strongly advocates a "preventative maintenance program" as well as replacement of water lines.

Town reservoir at end of Beechwood.

Pratt foresees replacement of present meters with those capable of instanteous and remote readings over cable or television lines to a billing computer. He knows that technology is presently available. He points out that "old meters do not run faster, they always slow down," and believes collections could be improved by replacing meters.

Pratt also wants to study which collection system produces greater revenue faster, but "leans toward the lien system."

Fasciano says the commissioners should "put our heads together to discuss money owed," to see if there are any other alternatives, as well as considering the most recent methods utilized.

Mormon convention

While the 153rd World General Conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened April 2 and 3 in salt Lake City, several hundred church members gathered locally at the Mormon chapel on Gardner St. in Hingham to view the five two-hour sessions originating from church headquarters in Utah live, via satelite.

It was the first time the general conference was brought into the Hingham chapel by the miracle of modern day communications.

"To receive teachings and counsel first hand was a privilege for all who attended," said Mrs. Thomas Doggett of Cohasset. She is a 13-year member who enjoyed "seeing" these leaders "face to face."

For Myrtle Derby of Cohasset, it was "the most marvelous thing I've ever heard."

If you knew the facts about leasing, you'd never buy a car again!
For some unknown reason, the many advantages of leasing a car versus buying one continues to be one of the best kept secrets in the automobile business. Furthermore, a longstanding misconception states that you have to own or be in a business to lease a car. Not true! Anyone can lease. And most people should.
Come in and let us prove to you that leasing is truly the intelligent alternative to buying a car.

The winner!

Two for victory — Ginny and John DeBassio at victory party at Kimball's.

DeBassio rolls, Langmaid, Kornet, Kern, Pratt, Guild & Sturdy are winners

With a 3-1 victory margin, former Police Chief John DeBassio led all vote getters in Saturday's historic town election.

The election turned out 48.6 percent of those eligible to vote as a new five-member board of selectmen and contests for sewer and water commissions and school committee sparked the election.

Saturday's spring-like weather didn't hurt the vote either as 2,328 residents came to the polls and voted. One-hundred twenty-seven voted absentee ballots.

DeBassio beat challenger Diane Sullivan by a 1,739 to 548 vote.

Joining DeBassio as new selectmen members are Clifford Mitman, Jr. and Frank England, who were unopposed in their election for three-year terms. England tallied 1,420 votes, Mitman 1,491, and blanks were 1,739 — the same number as DeBassio received.

Voters followed up a resounding town meeting vote calling for continuation of the alternative approach to town sewerage rather than a large central sewer plant.

Edward Guild ousted incumbent sewer commissioner Maxwell Pounder by a 1,272-843 margin. With his victory, Guild swung the balance of power on the three-member commission toward full support of an alternative proposal.

Guild will join Charles DeSantis, the original proponent of the alternative sewer plan. DeSantis, unopposed for a three-year term, collected one of the highest votes, 1,660.

In another important race, Peter Pratt, who emphasized reduction of the Water Department debt and investigation of selling surplus water, beat Anthony Fasciano for a three-year term on the water commission, 1,445 to 668.

In a close race, incumbent health board chairman Barbara Kern returned to office beating Laurence Mitchell, a plumber, 1,156 to 1,030, a 126 vote margin. There were 142 blank ballots in that race.

Incumbents Diana Kornet and John F. Langmaid returned to the school board for three more years as they beat challenger Judith Volungis. Langmaid collected the highest number of votes, 1,440. Kornet

Bonanza from the state... $190,707

Cohasset will receive a substantial increase in state aid under a new redistribution formula announced by Gov. Michael Dukakis Tuesday.

Under the Dukakis formula, Cohasset would get $190,707 more in state aid than the town received last year. The additional money from the state will, in effect, eliminate Cohasset's MBTA assessment of $93,201, which was estimated to be Cohasset's share of the new MBTA budget. The town receives no T service.

Should the legislature warm to the new Dukakis formula for distribution of state money, Cohasset and surrounding towns will receive more cash with which to offset cutbacks mandated by Proposition 2½.

Increased aid to cities and town was a constant theme in the Dukakis gubernatorial campaign last year.

Richard Conley leads intact school committee

By Moira McCarthy

With the re-election of incumbents Diana Kornet and John Langmaid, the five-member school committee remains intact following Saturday's election.

Richard Conley, in the third year of his three-year term, was elected chairman of the committee. Langmaid continues as vice-chairman and Diana Kornet, 1982-83 chairman, is secretary. Other members of the committee are Martha Gjesteby and Joseph Nedrow.

USE OF SCHOOL PROPERTY

The committee is drafting a policy of regulations for the use of school property during the summer.

Supt. Eugene Crowell outlined his proposal which would require all individuals to make their initial request to the principal of the school they wish to use. The principal would forward his recommendation to the superintendent.

"This is because the principal is the best one to know how a building should be used," Crowell said.

The superintendent would then consider the merit of the program, the fees and tuition to be charged and the materials and staff involved.

The current fee schedule is $20 a day for up to three rooms, and $5 a day for the use of equipment and electricity.

The school committee would then review the application for final approval.

Crowell said that "using the school in the summer will defray electricity and custodial work," because the money comes back to the town.

Chairman Conley suggested they look into setting up a revolving account for the athletic department, and have the summer user's money put into that, "so the money stays in the school system."

But Crowell said that, to his understanding, the money is public funds, and therefore, property of the town, not the schools. "But I'll investigate," he said.

"This could be an answer to the idea of being creative about fundraising," Kornet added.

In other business, the committee agreed to a transfer of funds that will save the schools $19,998 in supplies next year.

The amount is surplus from fiscal 1983, and Crowell applied it toward fiscal 1984 by pre-buying high school texts ($8,000), postage ($3,000), custodial supplies ($6,000) and an oil cap fill ($2,998).

"This will reduce next year's needs by $20,000," Crowell said.

The committee also discussed the PSO's request for an official policy on parental signing of student progress reports, deficiency reports and disciplinary referrals.

The PSO's concern is that there be a uniform policy so that parents, teachers and students know what is expected.

The committee agreed that it was needed, and decided to have the reports printed with a parent's signature line and instructions for them to be returned.

Crowell suggested that instead of a policy, the schools could make an administrative procedure.

PSO members agreed, saying they would do an update check in a year, to see if the system if working.

Diane Sullivan does not despair

By Jane Lane

After her defeat in Saturday's election, selectman candidate Diane Sullivan was back Monday night attending a board of health meeting as an interested resident.

Although she is not sure she will ever seek public office again, Sullivan said her interest in the function of town government has not diminished. A frequent audience member of selectmen, advisory and other committee meetings, Sullivan says she will continue that tradition.

"I want to know what is happening in the town and I want to remain an active citizen," she says.

The political novice says her experience in this campaign has taught her a lot about the town and its issues. And although she feels she could perform well as selectman, she is not sure she would ever accept an opportunity to run again.

Despite the wide margin of victory for her opponent, John DeBassio, she maintains, "I am not angry at the town."

She estimated her defeat was caused, at least in part, by an "emotional vote" by residents. Many residents felt the former police chief was victimized by the past board of selectmen, and perhaps this was one way to rectify a past wrong, she says.

Sullivan says although she realized as a newcomer to town politics she might lose on her first try, she never figured the margin would be so wide. She was stunned, she concedes, but not ashamed.

"It was my first attempt at elected office. But I don't think the vote was so much against me, as an emotional vote for my opponent," she says. Sullivan noted that even DeBassio poll workers and other supporters embraced her Saturday, and said they wished she had not run against DeBassio, but against one of the other candidates.

Sullivan says she does not feel inadequate for

Dump reopens

The Cohasset Heights Dump off Route 3A operated by Barry Bros. reopened March 7. It had been closed under a temporary court restraining order issued by Judge Roger Donahue January 21. According to Assistant Town Counsel, John Slater, the town had taken the matter to court after they had not complied with regulations issued by the Board of Health last November.

Barry Bros. appealed saying they were now complying with all the regulations, such as hours of operation, logs of trucks and types of refuse, etc., except the purchase of a scale. Judge Edith Fine allowed the reopening until the latter matter of the scale is heard in court. Slater said motions will be heard on Friday, April 1 and he expects the case may go to trial the end of April or the beginning of May.

One resident reported that "the seagulls are back again." It has been a concern of the Board of Health that seagulls might pollute Lily Pond. Slater said the dump had never had to file an Environmental Impact Statement. The Board of Health is working to gain information needed to make any further determinations, he added.

Gracious Lady still dry docked

Owners of the "Gracious Lady" are "pushing for the end of the week" to get the commuter boat out of dry dock and back in operation, owner Charles English Jr. said Monday.

The boat hit an unidentified submerged object on its maiden cruise, and subsequently lost a strut a week later.

"The parts are in to repair the boat, but the weather's been against us," English said. He said the boat is in dry dock at Worcester Marine until the weather is mild enough to heat the part before it is intalled.

English could offer no guarantees, but said he "truly hopes it will be in operation by the end of the week."

At that time, a new expanded schedule will go into effect, he added. More information about the boat's schedule is available by calling 567-6227.

Wedding approval

Selectmen voted 2-1 to approve the request from two Scituate couples to hold a double wedding on Government Island August 27.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur voted against the proposal, because of the rule against parking on the island.

"I'm not opposed to them being married there, I'm just opposed to them parking there," she said.

But Selectman Rocco Laugelle said, "It's a special occasion. If they want to get married there, there's no reason in the world they shouldn't. We should feel honored." He added that as long as they have the police to handle traffic, the wedding shouldn't cause any problems.

McArthur warned that although a wedding is a special occasion, "the next week there will be another one."

But since police will be patroling, and the reception is to be held elsewhere, the request was approved.

Streetlight acceptance

Selectmen moved to install a streetlight between 253 and 256 North Main Street after a citizen said that he would pay to have one installed if selectmen wouldn't. Selectmen agreed that since the need was great, the town would spend money to have one installed.

Firefighter suspended

Firefighter James Rooney was suspended for three days and docked some overtime money for what Fire Chief Martin Dooley says is "abuse of sick leave." Rooney requested a Civil Service public hearing and one was due to be held at Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting.

Rooney was suspended March 29, 30 and 31; he is now working again. The firefighters contract calls for sick leave up to 15 days annually.

Ainslie honored

Selectman Chairman Henry Ainslie was presented with a photograph of town hall from the selectmen and a certificate of commendation from Representative Mary Jennette Murray on his last night sitting on the board.

After accepting the gifts, Ainslie said, "I'll be around. Not that I want anyone to call on me for a committee, but I'll be around town watching everyone."

Rocco Laugelle said that "at the time we were looking for a new water and sewer commissioner, I didn't vote for Henry. But I was sorry I didn't. From the day he came on, he did a great job. Henry, I'm going to miss you."

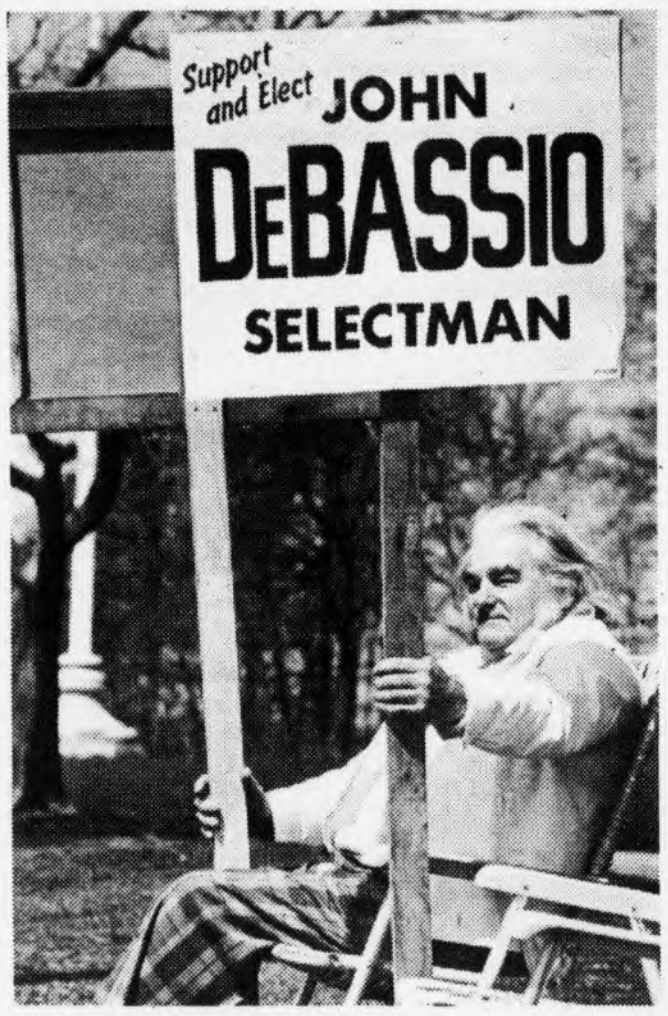
Mitman resignation

Selectmen accepted the resignation of Clifford Mitman from the personnel committee with thanks for his years of service.

Mitman said he was resigning from the committee "so as to avoid conflict with the town bylaws." He added that he has enjoyed his time on the committee.

"He must be anticipating something," Selectman Henry Ainslie joked.

Corner Meat to open



Selectmen met with David Richardson of the new Corner Meat Market to "get to know him as a new business member of the town," Selectman Henry Ainslie said.

"I've been through (the Corner Meat Market) and it's a credit to the community," Selectman Rocco Laugelle said. "It's good competition for the Stop 'N Shop and we need it. We're glad to see you come aboard."

Richardson said they plan to open at noon April 19. The store will employ between five and twenty people.

"We'll be hiring a pretty good slew" of high schoolers also, Richardson said. "We have lots of applicants."

He added that the store, which is in the old Fayva shoe store site, will be 68 feet wide, with 50 feet of that being a glass door area that will convert to an open air market in the summertime.

followed with 1,341 and Volungis collected 888 votes. Blank ballots totaled 986.

School Facilities Chairman Robert Sturdy beat Frank C.J. Hamilton in the contest for a five-year term on the planning board, 1,085 to 899.

JOHN DEBASSIO

DeBassio said he interprets his huge win as a product of his record within the Police Department. "As a former police chief, I had a record people could look to. It obviously was well received by the town and put me in good stead.

"I'm tickled to death. I never did expect that kind of turnout," he added.

TED GUILD

"I'm very pleased with the results. Max Pounder was a resourceful, resilient opponent. I had to work hard because he did a lot of shoe leather.

"It wasn't a DeBassio landslide but it was a 60-40 vote for fully investigating the I-A approach."

Guild, a vice president of Ionics of Watertown, said the first assignment for the sewer board is to work out a contract with Ward Associates and prepare a feasibility study for the state Department of Quality Engineering.

Guild said Ward officials have said they will prepare the study within two months and will only need $10,000, half of the sum appropriated for the engineering study.

PETER PRATT

Pratt, one of the youngest town officials at 27 years-old, said he tried to be as specific as possible in his campaign as he addressed reducing the water department debt and stressing a better return on investment.

Pratt has been involved with state and national politics but this was his first work in running for office on a local level. He found it "very exciting" and concluded Saturday represents a dawn of a new era in Cohasset government with many new and fresh approaches to government.

LANDMAID AND KORNET

John Langmaid and Diana Kornet saw their re-elections as an indication of the town's support not only of the present committee, but of education in general.

"People understand that there is respect and trust between the school staff and the school committee," Langmaid said.

"That's one of the most important things that can happen in a school system. Both of us feel very pleased that the voters felt that way."

Kornet added that because most of challenger Judy Volungis' support came from "cutters, I regard it as an indication of a support and rededication to education."

[For complete election results, see page 9. Ed.]

the position of selectman simply because she has never been a member of a town committe or board. For two years, she has had her name on file for nomination to any of the voluntary town committees. She has never been asked to serve on a voluntary committee, although she would accept, Sullivan adds.

Sullivan thought her attendance and knowledge of the activities of several town boards would enhance her campaign, not hamper it.

"I felt very qualified for the job of selectman, and I still do," she says. "I have a very broad-based interest in the town, and I think I could have served the town well as selectman."

Art gallery members win awards

The Scituate Arts Association Gallery, 134 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, announces two artist members have received an award.

Mary Callahan of Marshfield, watercolorist and instructor for the SAA Gallery, has been accepted into The New England Watercolor Society. Callahan was presented this prestigious award after presenting three paintings to a five judge panel at the Holiday Inn, Waltham.

One hundred and twenty-five artists from six states competed and only 11 were chosen to become members. The New England Water Color Society has 104 members and is one of the most prestigious associations in New England.

Patricia McCarthy of Cohasset, watercolorist and artist member, was recently presented The Air France Award for a watercolor from the Copley Society juried show.

The thin man said DeBassio would 'win easy'

By Patricia Anne Walsh

At 7:15 a.m. last Saturday, I asked the thin man sitting next to me at the Log and Line how he thought the town elections would turn out.

"Oh, they all say down here DeBassio will win easy. The incumbents will return to the school committee. A sympathy vote will play a part there. Peter Pratt will win by 100 votes."

A few minutes later Burt Pratt (Peter's father) came in and I repeated the prediction. "Well, I hope Peter will win by more than that!" he replied.

When Peter Pratt arrived, I repeated the quote. "Oh, he's a long time handicapper down here, but I expect to win by a lot more votes than that," he replied confidently.

Frank England's not here yet, I said to Bob Ciciotte. "Oh, he's out jogging as usual on Forest Avenue," he said. "I just passed him." I said that 62 year-old England might well live to be as old as his mother who celebrated her 101st birthday Sunday. "If he had had any opposition in the selectman's race he might well have been jogging up and down Beechwood and Stockbridge Streets."

At the 8 a.m. opening of the polls, cars and vans parked strategically displayed large campaign signs. Candidates scurried about distributing signs to their supporters.

At 8:05 a.m. Town Clerk Charles Marks appeared on the front steps of town hall and shooed away four candidates. "You have to keep 150 feet away from the door," he admonished.

"But I've seen candidates standing there before," complained one candidate.

"Not since John DeBassio came to town," said another. "He enforced the election laws when he was Chief of Police, so voters no longer have to run the gamut!"

Herb Brown posted a sign at the Boy Scout canteen thanking The Donut Tree, Purity Supreme, Angelos/Curtis Farms, and anonymous donors for their contributions of food and drinks for Troop 28's fund-raising sale on election day.

Larry Mitchell did not hold a poster. He felt the large sign on his van parked across from First Parish Church said it all. His father-in-law, Bill Poland, was much in evidence all morning.

Bob Sturdy did not carry a sign, wear a name tag or spend a dime on his election, even though he was opposed. "I was a school committeeman in Brookline," he said. "I am well aware that people who only give modest contributions feel they own you."

His opponent's wife carried a poster, "because my husband has to work at the water department until 3 p.m." Mrs. Frank Hamilton took her place late in the afternoon.

Diane Kornet arrived after 10 a.m. "Three of my four children were sick this morning" she said. "See that sign on top of the van? It was my husband's when he ran for assessor last year. I just printed "School Committee" on a piece of shelf paper and pasted it over "Assessor" under "Kornet."

At noon Clark Chatterton, a long-time judge of horseraces, predicted "DeBassio, Kornet, Langmaid, Sturdy, Pratt and Guild will be the winners in the contested races, and Mitchell will win by a very narrow margin."

Cliff Mitman whispered a joke, but admonished me not to repeat it. "I'm saving it for tonight's victory party," he said.

DeBassio congratulated Sullivan for running a clean campaign without personality issues. Other candidates watching the spectacle, also praised their opponents.

Maxwell Pounder put in a long day. He was up as usual at 4 a.m. helping his wife Sine bake bread in The Bread Shop. As the sun beat down, his face took on a deep tan, as though he had vacationed in the Carribbean.

However, his opponent, Ted Guild, burned lobster-red.

At 5:50 a bird sitting in a tree over a candidate's head, let go. "Perhaps that's an omen," laughed his opponent. Unfortunately the candidate also lost his election, so he suffered twice that day.

As the polls closed at 6:05 p.m. the total votes cast were announced to be 2,328. "I won the pool," chortled Burt Pratt.

I guessed 2,307, the next closest guess.

The votes were announced at 7:30 p.m. by Town Moderator Bill Weeks. He said DeBassio and Richard Barrow were the two highest vote-getters.

□Mimi and Ed Mulvey started April off with a bang by having a party. Their bash was a huge success, topped off by great food, including homemade Italian rolls (made by Ed) and a yummy beef and barley soup that was a "joint effort." The highlight of the evening was dessert — huge strawberries and bananas, dipped in chocolate. Beautiful to look at, even better to eat. A super way to kick off spring.

□Town moderator Bill Weeks had to stop the Town Meeting briefly last Saturday when an uninvited straggler wandered in twice. It was a huge dog, but Dick Conley took care of the matter. He gave the dog the "bum's rush" right out the side door and the meeting resumed without further delay.

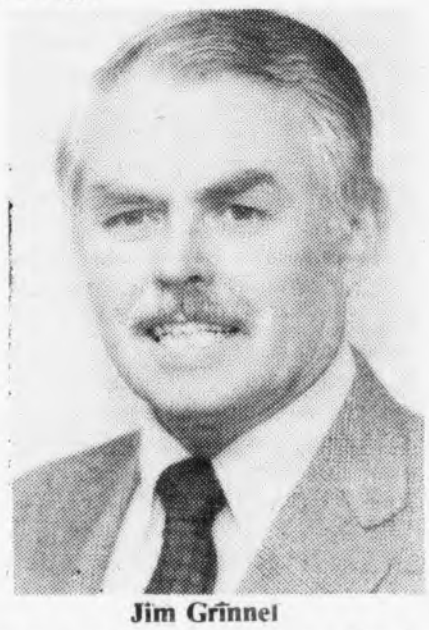
□Here is a reprint from the Weymouth News about Paul Wilson, a sixth grade student at the Deer Hill School:

Paul entered the Andrea McCoy Boxing Tournament coached by Tom Allan of the South Shore YMCA of Quincy. Paul will compete in the A.A.U. sponsored Junior Olympics in Pawtucket., R.I., starting April 15.



"Time Bomb" Paul Wilson dropped his bombs on Anthony Pitraca, knocking out the Coventry, R.I., boxer in the second round to cop the 75 pound championship in the Third Annual Andrae McCoy Tournament last Thursday in New Bedford.

As the bell rang for the first round, Wilson met Pitraca with a barrage of left jabs to the face and then unloaded a sizzling right cross to the jaw that floored the Rhode Islander for an eight count. Before the round ended Wilson floored Pitraca again with another right as the bell saved him for further punishment.

Pitraca met the same fate in the second round as he was again dropped for an eight count. As he rose gamely, he staggered and fell to the canvas. Referr Spider Freeman stopped the contest and awarded the bout to the South Shore YMCA battler on a second round technical knock out.

The victory was the third in three tournament bouts for Wilson, crediting him with two knockouts and a decision for the championship. He was awarded a trophy for his efforts.

The tournament is sponsored by the Boys' Club Alumni and Men's Club and is named in honor of the late Andrea McCoy, a Boys' Club boxer, who was killed in a plane crash while touring with a United States Boxing Tekam three years ago.

Henderson authorized to seek sewer extension

Town Counsel Richard Henderson and his associate John Slater received permission from the sewer commission to ask the state for an extension on the acceptance of the $1.1 million dollar sewer grant.

Chairman Joseph Gwinn requested opinions from Henderson regarding acceptance by the sewer board of the state planning advance for funding of Step 2 of the $13.9 million Metcalf and Eddy plan for a large central sewer system.

The grant was offered by the State March 11, with an April 11 deadline.

Gwinn also asked whether the board may sign a contract with Metcalf and Eddy for Step 2 work, and whether the work may be started prior to the completion of Step 1 requirements.

Henderson ruled the November Special Town Meeting prohibits the board from signing a Step 2 contract with Metcalf and Eddy until the board has attempted to renegotiate the Consent Judgment and petitioned the Court to modify the Judgment.

Henderson said the board has fulfilled the first condition, but not yet petitioned to modify the Consent decree. Accordingly in his opinion, the board does not have authority at this time to sign a Step 2 contract with Metcalf and Eddy.

Henderson added, "Article 4 says nothing about the board's authority to accept a Step 2 grant from the state. The state's present outstanding offer contains a condition, however, that requires the board to submit a signed copy of the Metcalf and Eddy contract within 30 days after the grant is accepted. The board will probably be unable to meet this requirement because it will not have completed the court proceedings involved in petitioning to modify the Consent Judgement."

Therefore, Henderson said although the board may be authorized to accept the State Step 2 grant, he recommended it would be best to ask the state for an extension of the acceptance date from April 11 to allow the board time to seek modification of the consent decree.

Gwinn's third question asked if it is legal for the state to make the Step 2 grant offer before completing the federal environmental review of the Metcalf & Eddy plan.

He said, "The Step 2 grant money is state and not federal money. The offering of the grant is, therefore, not considered a major federal action that triggers the need for federal environmental review. Though it would make more sense to complete the Step 1 environmental review process before starting on Step 2," he cautioned, "I find no legal prohibition against the state offering the Step 2 grant at this time."

The letter to the state says: "It is our present understanding that the Environmental Protection Agency has not yet completed its environmental review of the Metcalf and Eddy facilities plan. There is a proposed FNSI now under review by EPA. Therefore, at this point in time, we do not know whether the EPA will require a full Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) before approving the Cohasset facilities plan." Commissioner Charles DeSantis said he had been unable to find out why the two rejections.

"If an EIS is required, the results of that study may necessitate significant changes in the facilities plan. Changes in the facilities plan will entail changes in the Step 2 plans. Accordingly, if we proceed with Step 2 now before the EIS determination is made, we may end up wasting a considerable amount of time and money preparing Step 2 plans and drawings that are not usable for the facilities plan as modified after the EIS. We believe it makes much more sense to await the completion of Step 1 before proceding to Step 2," DeSantis said.

The request then asked for an extension until 10 days after the completion of all federal environmental reviews of the Step 1 facilities plan and the expiration of all applicable appeal periods.

WARD ASSOCIATES

In other business, the commissioners decided to send a letter of intent to Ward Associates to start alternative studies immediately, particularly to arrange for long-lead items. They also agreed to meet with Joseph Ward Tuesday, April 12, to negotiate a contract, scope of work, work statement, schedule and price. Town Counsel is to approve the contract.

So. Shore Science Center holds outdoor classroom

There's an outdoor classroom at the South Shore Natural Science Center on Jacobs Lane, Norwell. It's a perfect place for teachers to take their classes, Grades Kindergarten-8, for introduction to known facts about nature as well as many of nature's secrets which are carefully hidden from those who are non-observant or unaware.

Children roam the trails; take dipping nets to discover what lives in the pond; and listen to lectures on fascinating subjects by an expert in his field.

Minds will take wing with birds; buzz with the knowledge of how bees make honey; and become aware that the common weed can be the source of food.

Teachers are invited to call Elizabeth Lawrence or Pat Pratson for information at 659-2559.

The South Shore Natural Science Center is located on Jacobs Lane in Norwell just off Route 123, and is open seven days a week from 9-4 weekdays and 1-4 Sundays and most holidays.

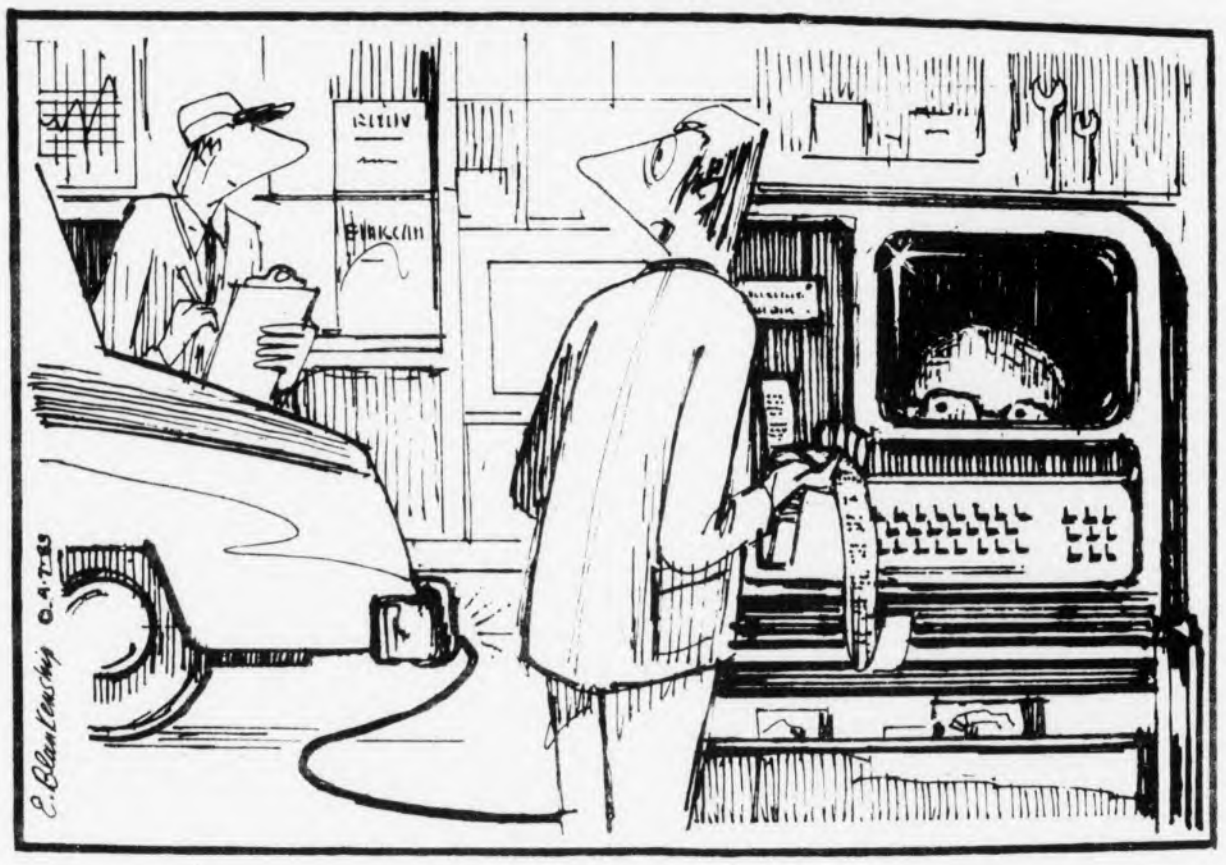
Editorial

Notes & comment

At the time the town voted to expand the board of selectmen from three to five we expressed skepticism about one time quick fixes for the ills of government. We said then that nurturing democracy is a duty that goes on and on, and the trouble with "quick fixes" is (a) there's no such thing and (b) they tend to lull the citizenry into believing their democratic labors are done.



Democratic labors are never done, and an argument can be made that the public interest is better served by contentious public officials who keep the citizenry aroused than by geniuses who put the public to sleep before leaving their offices to rogues.

At any rate, Saturday's town election to some extent confirms the concerns we had in November. Our concern stems from the fact that we have elected two three-year selectmen without the unforgiving scrutiny of a contest. We don't blame Cliff Mitman and Frank England. It's not their fault nobody chose to oppose them, and from all indications they are very well qualified.

But as a matter of principle the town is better served when a contest takes place, for example, the one between John DeBassio and Diane Sullivan for the one-year term on the board of selectmen. The fact that the two candidates scrutinized each other's record and felt the pressure of scrutiny themselves is a good thing. That DeBassio emerged unscathed from such a contest is a qualification that Mitman and England by dint of their free ride don't have.

As we say, we have no dissatisfaction whatever with Mitman and England. Our dissatisfaction is with the paucity of candidates and contests. Cohasset may be lucky enough to get away with uncontested elections this time, but if free rides continue, sooner or later we'll get burned.

Taking Jacob to church

By Claire McDonough

"Won't it be fun taking Jacob to church?" I asked the Dragon.

"It brings back so many memories of when our kids were little and we used to take them."

He looked at me thoughtfully. "I do remember, as a matter of fact. Look, why don't you folks just run along to the ten? I think I'll go to the 11:30. I have to rotate the tires on the van."

"You did that last January," I told him suspiciously, "during Tanya's birthday party."

"I can't be too careful," he replied virtuously. "The safety of my loved ones is at stake."

My daughter, Eileen, grabbed her two year old son and Skipper took Tanya by the hand.

"It's a shame the other kids are away," I said. "They'll miss going to church with Jacob."

Eileen fastened Jacob's seat belt. "Just how good is your memory, anyway?" she asked.

"Perfect," I replied cheerfully. "I remember how adorable you children looked dressed in your Sunday best and kneeling in church."

"Do you remember the time Maureen wanted to leave early? You told her she was in God's house and it wasn't polite to leave someone's house while He was still talking to you. Then the next week a man in the pew in front of ours started to walk out, and Maureen yelled, 'Hay, Ma! Look at that fat man. He's not being polite to God.' You were so embarassed."

"I was not," I told her. "It served that man right for going before Mass was over."

"Really? Then how come you said, 'Can't you find your mother, little girl? Don't worry. I'll give you a ride home.' Then you turned to the lady behind you and said you thought it was terrible the way some people don't take care of their kids."

"Well, anyway," I said hastily, "you children were usually perfect in church. Of course there was the time we all rose to sing, 'Hear, O Lord,' except for Breida who sang, 'Can You Tell Me How to Get to Sesame Street?' "

We entered St. Mary's and Jacob smiled angelically. "Jacob in church," he caroled. "Happy!"

He turned to the lady next to him. "Baby Jesus in His house," he explained, "eating cheese. Then He'll go night, night."

He directed his attention to a man across the aisle. Clearly it was time for a man-to-man.

"I have Underoos," Jacob confided.

It sounded good. Put to music it sounded better.

"Underooooos," Jacob sang.

The choir tried to get into the act. "Hosannah," the choir sang.

Nothing if not magnanimous, Jacob joined in. "Hosannah," he sang. "Underooooos!"

"If that little boy can't find his mother," I told Eileen, "we can give him a ride home."

The nice lady beside Jacob smiled. "This is his home," she said. "He's in his Father's house."

Eileen gave Jacob a coin for the collection. He scooted around the pew and threw it in the holy water font. "More dollars, Mommy?"

Several people smiled. They smiled at Jacob, then they smiled at each other. Skipper smiled at me, and I smiled at Tanya.

Did the apostles smile, I wondered? Certainly their Master must have, when He said, "Suffer the little children to come to Me. Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Grateful teachers

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Cohasset Teachers Association, I would like to thank those citizens of Cohasset who chose to support their school committee's request for $53,000 more than the advisory committee had recommended. All of the staff of the Cohasset Public Schools are working their hardest to maintain the high academic standards that Cohasset parents require of us. That excellence and dedication comes at a price both in dollars and in community support.

There is a mistaken motion that Prop. 2½ has had no effect in the schools and other town services which I would like to put in perspective. We have held the line of excellence and are trying not to fall back as a result of Prop. 2½. We know we cannot afford to update many programs and we must scrape by with the texts and programs we have. An experienced staff can usually improvise to meet material and conference shortages. As long as good programs are in place, we can run them with the cooperation and support of an administration and school committee that places a high priority on excellence. Each department head must justify every cent he spends, to both the administration and school committee. This committee is well aware that Cohasset citizens demand rigorous accounting of their tax money.

However, fiscal responsibility is not always a matter of spending the fewest dollars. I do not have to remind Cohasset citizens of the poor value they received from the low bidder who first was chosen to re-assess the town. Likewise, the man who saves money by not painting and repairing his house soon loses it in the diminished value of his property and ultimately his neighborhood. Taxes, something we all hate to pay, are part of the price of living in a worthwhile community.

It especially worries me that some people in town criticize the school committee because the schools have not cut programs or schools. That's like criticizing a company's board of directors because the company makes a good profit on a good product.

Your public school system is a good one. Public education for your children is putting away resources for your future. If you think they can be better and more efficiently educated for less money, you are falling for a dangerous con game.

The schools cannot replace the parents or church in raising the next generation, but we often are one of the few places a child can come to learn his basic thinking skills without being exploited for profit. We serve the whole community by serving its youth.

On behalf of your childrens' teachers and school, I ask you all to continue to support the school committee's desire to bring out their best. Public schools produce the great wealth of our future.

Thank you.

Kimball's ruling

To the Editor:

How does the sewer commission have the authority to authorize the opening of Kimball's Restaurant facilities to the general public?

When the motel was built, it was under the stipulation that none of its facilities would ever be opened to any other than registered guests. To the best of my knowledge, the citizens of Cohasset have never authorized a change from this ruling. If the Roy family cannot abide by this ruling, they should not have purchased the motel! If they wish to change the conditions under which they operate, there are legal channels through which this may be done, I am sure. But to simply ignore a rule or condition, hoping that no one will notice, is inexcusable.

Withholding dividends

To the Editor:

Like the literally thousands of your readers who have contacted me in recent weeks to express their opposition to the new requirement that income taxes be withheld on interest and dividend income, I believe this withholding will prove to be burdensome to savers and their depository institutions, and will fail to raise additional revenues sufficient to justify itself. For this reason, I voted against the 1982 Tax Act which mandated interest and dividend income withholding and I have co-sponsored legislation to repeal it.

Unfortunately, the coupon campaigns organized by many of our local savings institutions have very nearly overwhelmed my office in our attempt to respond individually to everyone who has sent us a coupon. Accordingly, I would like to take this opportunity to assure area residents that, while I may not be able to confirm to them personally my opposition to tax withholding on interest and dividend income, I do, indeed, intend to continue to do everything I can to see this new requirement repealed.

Moreover, I would like to encourage persons, especially the elderly, who may qualify for exemption from this requirement, to call my local office to request a Fact Sheet which I hope will answer some of the questions they may have about withholding on their interest and dividend income.

Crowell corrects

To the Editor:

In the interest of accuracy and for the integrity of the school department budget, I feel that it is necessary to correct an error that was printed in a Tuesday, April 5 Patriot Ledger article.

We are grateful to the taxpayers for the support of our budget and we do not want any misunderstanding to develop.

In a campaign interview, Mrs. Judith Volungis charged that the high school will add six new courses in the coming school year and implied that additional staff and expenses would be necessary to support those courses in the next fiscal year.

The exact opposite is true. The school system has cut a teacher and a half from the junior/senior high school staff at a savings of $29,233. In addition to this, since the teachers' contract with the school department remains unchanged for next year, it would be impossible for the administration to add additional courses to teacher schedules due to the fact that a number of class assignments is clearly designated as a matter of contractual agreement.

The misunderstanding may have been caused due to the annual changes in courses which take place in any high school between school years and in some instances between school terms. These changes are necessary due to the shifting needs and interests of the student body and their families and the school system has an obligation to provide courses which naturally evolve as students move from one level to another. For example, a Latin IH group will take Latin 2H next year. That new division will take the place of the beginning section; the course is a different one, not an additional one.

In the case of the computer programs purchased for college entrance board review, these materials are to be used in existing mathematics courses and will also be used in the mathematics lab during study hall periods and the afternoon by individual students as they prepare for their college board exams.

Another illustration of this normal shifting would be the new health course entitled "Marriage and Family Living." This elective course offered to seniors will be taught by the health director in lieu of a section of health 7 and due to the fact that the director's elementary curriculum writing project will be finished during the summer months, allowing him time to pick up this course without any cost in terms of materials or staff to the system.

The irony of this situation is that I should have to write a correction aimed at guaranteeing the community that I had not added new courses to our high school program. Part of our responsibility is to do just that in order to provide a current and competitive education for our young people.

Eugene C. Crowell,
Superintendent of Schools

Murray's memos

Report from the state house

By Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray

In July, 1980, a 10 percent tax was enacted and signed into law. The argument then was that the tax was needed because fuel costs were soaring and the state needed to increase the funding for home fuel assistance to the elderly.

Today, fuel costs have dropped significantly. Gas is down to a $1/gallon at some service stations and, given the worldwide oil glut, it would appear that prices will continue to drop.

Now, Governor Dukakis has called for a new additional tax on gas. This is part of his "Revenue Enforcement and Protection Program," a plan for new revenues necessary to balance the budget as proposed by the Governor.

Proponents of the Governor's increased gas tax argued that this increase would really not hurt the consumer because it is, after all, only a little bit more to pay at the pumps. They reminded their fellow legislators of President Reagan's five cent gas tax hike which, like the state increase, will become effective April 1. However, they neglected to say that when the President increased the gas tax, he compensated by decreasing the income tax through greater exemptions.

Republicans in the House fought the new gas tax on two fronts.

First, we believe that new taxes are not necessary for fiscal '84. The Governor's budget calls for the creation of 1,791 new state jobs at a cost of approximately $32 million. These positions are unnecessary as there are already more than 20,000 already authorized and funded state jobs that are vacant. Add the $32 million that could be saved by not creating these new posts to the $17.1 million surplus that the highway account is expected to have at the end of this fiscal year and the total equals the $49 million anticipated from this new gas tax.

To add insult to injury, this new gas tax is being rushed through the legislature so that it can be in effect for the last quarter of the current fiscal year — despite the fact that there will be an overall surplus. One legislator accurately called this "revenue-grabbing" during debate.

The consumer forced the cost of fuel down by conserving these past several years. We shouldn't be taxed for that.

Board of Health briefs . . .

FOOD PRESERVATIVES

The Mass. Department of Public Health's Division of Food and Drugs determined that certain food preservatives called sulfiting agents (used by restaurants and retail food stores) may cause serious health problems for asthmatics. The Department of Food and Drugs will only allow the use of such agents if consumers are informed of their use by means of a conspicuous, easily readable label placed on a menu statement. If such notice is not given to consumers, the Department will consider the food unsafe for human consumption.

CHLORDANE UPDATE

The Board of Health has been in contact with the pesticide board to discuss the proper disposal of the now prohibited chlordane. The state is presently developing guidelines/procedures for its proper disposal. They expect to make this information available within three months. In the meantime, hold on to your chlordane. The board will notify residents immediately when they have the guidelines. Call 383-1664 if you have any questions.

HOUSEHOLD PRODUCTS

The disposal of hazardous waste is a nation-wide problem with serious implications for the health and safety of today's citizens and future generations. The responsibility of ensuring the protection of groundwater, which is the source of drinking water for 50 percent of the state should be shared.

There are ways in which people can actively reduce the amount of "Hazardous" products they use, and thus reduce the probability of contaminating groundwater supplies. For instance, instead of synthetic air fresheners, one can use a small quantity of vinegar in an open dish. For a clogged drain, try pouring boiling water down the drain or use a metal "snake." One teaspoon of lemon oil mixed with one pint of mineral oil can be used to polish your furniture. The rubbing of crushed raw nuts will also shine your furniture.

Washing and rinsing plant leaves with soap (biodegradable) and water will elminate the need for potentially toxic pesticides. Placing newspapers around closets or the use of cedar chests or chips around clothing may be substituted for moth balls.

Salt, baking soda, water and elbow grease will clean your oven as well as any commercial oven cleaner. Cleaning your silver may be accomplished by placing it in one quart of warm water containing one teaspoon baking soda, one teaspoon salt and a piece of aluminum foil. Bleach will sanitize your toilet bowls and sinks. Be sure to rinse it well, however. You just need a small amount. Vinegar and water is an excellent window/glass cleaner. Old newspapers can be used instead of rags or paper towels.

These alternatives aren't always as convenient as readily available commercial products, however, they help reduce the number of chemicals that we use. The substitution of less hazardous products to meet our household needs will help lessen our chances of ground water contamination and thus, protect our drinking water supplies.

ANIMAL PERMITS

Horse and other animal permits expire December 31 of each year. Those individuals who have not yet renewed their permits should call the board of health office for an inspection. Individuals who have animals that are not licensed should also call the board so arrangements can be made to issue the proper licenses.

SEASONAL BUSINESSES

Businesses which are not open year round must be inspected prior to their seasonal opening. Licenses can be issued following a routine inspection. Arrangements for a mutually convenient inspection time can be made by calling the board office.

Maria Plante, the casino fighter, won't give in

By Claire McDonough

Maria Plante is basically a gentle person, but when she senses an injustice to a child or a threat to her beloved South Shore, she's willing to fight all comers.

Although she was born and raised on the North Shore, when Maria was a student at Regis College her parents built a home in Cohasset.

Later she became engaged to Patrick Plante, an industrial arts teacher at Cohasset High School and the couple decided to spend the rest of their lives in Cohasset.

They spent the year before their marriage building the home they now occupy on Jerusalem Road. It's a lived-in, loved home, and over the years it has been enlarged as the Plante family increased.

The family now includes 21 year-old Patrick, Jr. who is a senior at Northeastern College of Criminal Justice and a Coast Guard reservist; 20 year-old Paul, a scholarship student now in his junior year at Tufts University College of Engineering, 16 year-old Jacqueline, an all-honors junior at Cohasset High, Jennifer, age 9, who is in the fourth grade at Deer Hill School, and 8 year-old Peter who is a special needs student at Osgood School.

In order to supplement the family income, the Plantes have made an avocation of buying and renovating — either for sale or rent — older homes in the South Shore area, a project in which parents and children share the labor.

One would think that Maria's hands would be filled with a house, husband, five children and a remodeling business, but over 16 years this remarkable lady has volunteered in some capacity to ensure continued excellence in public education. To that end, she has served on parent councils in elementary, middle, junior high and high school levels and is presently a board member of Cohasset's newly organized Parent School Organization.

Perhaps most important, for the past four years Maria has served as a volunteer with other parents to bring the "Handicap Awareness Program" to school children. Together with other mothers and fathers of special needs children, she has formed a Parent Advisory Council to work with the school staff and administration to establish and maintain community programs that will educate each child to his or her fullest capacity in the most cost effective manner.

"Education and job training," she stressed, "are the keys to a productive society."

Maria is presently vice president and legislative chairman of the South Shore Association for Retarded Citizens, whose purpose is to promote the general welfare of mentally retarded of all ages at home, in the community, in institutions and in public and private schools.

Although she is noted for her determination, Maria admits that she can be deeply hurt when people object to the cost of educating and training retarded and handicapped youngsters.

"It's true that it's expensive," she states, "but consider the alternative — state institutionalization costs over $50,000 per year per child. I would far rather keep our children at home with the family's loving care and in a community where many of them can be self-supporting members of society. In the end, this is far less costly than a life time of minimal care in an institution where they are a total burden to the taxpayers."

Maria became embroiled in still another cause when Metro Goldwyn Mayer purchased 64 acres of Hull property about 3/10 of a mile from Maria's driveway in order to build a gambling casino.

"I knew little or nothing about casinos, so I started researching the subject. My first thought," she adds, "was that if a casino could help the economically deprived area of Hull by bringing jobs and lowering their tax rate I would support it.

"The more I learned, however, the more convinced I became that the construction of a casino would mean nothing but grief for people on the South Shore — including the residents of Hull.

"I joined the Hull-based anti casino activist group, Citizens Against Casino Gambling, led by Carol Oteri. Soon a small nucleus of dedicated people grew into a state-wide organization. I am a member of the Board of Directors."

The press did not always treat the group kindly, and Maria laughs when she recalls seeing herself referred to in print as a member of a "collection of unsophisticated housewives over 40."

Unsophisticated or not, CACG persisted.

"After two years of almost daily research with Carol Oteri of Hull and Beth Harling of Hingham, I find that there is not one aspect of casino gambling that would convince me. It is not an economic panacea. If anything, it is a regressive form of taxation that places a tremendous burden on the municipality that must provide police and fire protection, court costs and jail facilities, highway maintenance and construction, medical facilities and emergency services, water supply and energy production, sewerage and waste disposal, social and welfare services and escalating seasonal unemployment compensation.

"Just look at Atlantic City. The experience there indicates that it is the elderly and the poor who are hardest hit by the increased rents and housing costs. The present residents of Hull aren't the ones who would get the jobs that MGM promises. By and large, these would go to people the casino would bring in.

"Although many Hull officials support the proposal," Maria adds, "I think it is significant that the legislators who represent areas that would be impacted by the casinos all speak out against it. This includes Senator Allan McKinnon, who represents the town of Hull, and Senator Webber of the Berkshire area as well as Senator Doan from Cape Cod. In the House of Representatives, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, and Reps. Matrango, Lynch, Greenhalgh and Flood all oppose the institution of casino gambling in Massachusetts.

"Who are the proponents? People like former Senator Bill Owens of Roxbury and Senator Arthur Lewis of Jamaica Plain. Now Rep. Flaherty of South Boston has filed a casino bill, and the Mariner reports that he has also filed a bill that would provide access through Wompatuck State Park.

"I say, if casinos are so desirable, why aren't they pushing for them in their districts?"

Maria agrees that Hull desperately needs revitalization, and says that she will support any reasonble proposal to upgrade that town's economy.

"But casinos won't do it. Using M.G.M.'s own figures, which may be optimistic, the total revenue projections for two casinos comes to less than one-half of 1 percent of the Massachusetts tax revenues collected in 1981.

"Projections include direct taxes at 7 percent of casino net wins, fees and property taxes as estimated by M.G.M. Hull would get 40 percent of this 7 percent.

"Is it any wonder that a report commissioned by the Congress of the United States in 1976, 'Gambling in America,' concludes, 'Compared to the costs of government, to say nothing of the potential social costs, the revenues that could be made by taxing or operating casinos...would be trivial.' "

Maria adds, "What I am saying is, look at what you do very, very carefully. Do your research. Much income has been lost to Hull because developers have been turned away. Take the redevelopment area. They say it's a flood area, but it's the only part of Hull that didn't flood in '78. It didn't flood this year either.

"Not everyone in Hull favors a casino. There are those who are trying to get a message to the people, but there are a few in power who block everything. They are afraid that if they allow development and a broader tax base, people won't be hurting as much as they are now. They won't be so willing to gamble on a casino."

She sighs. "The strategy of the casino people — and I've read it in a gaming magazine — is to wear the volunteer housewife into the ground. Many people think it's a dead issue and they don't have to worry about it. This isn't true. The casino people have a great deal of time, and they can try to outlast us. If I lose, I will have done my best. At least I will have told people the truth."

Asked what her plans are for the future, Maria

Planners meet on Cushing Plaza, Doane Street

By Patricia Anne Walsh

The planning board acted to correct two "oversights" April 6.

Chairman Barbara Power acknowledged that Building Inspector Robert Dennis allowed the addition on the former Fayva Shoe Store, which will reopen next week as The Corner Meat Shop in Cushing Plaza, Route 3A, to be erected without a site plan review as required under zoning bylaws.

Power also acknowledged that the planning board failed to require Frederick Thayer, developer of 100 Pond Street, to post a bond for his Phase I work.

The bylaws require a site plan review for new additions over 200 square feet. Cushing Plaza is owned by Zaven Dadekian of New Jersey, and Plaza Manager Joseph Quinn appeared with the new plans before the planning board and the design review board.

The board unanimously waived requirements for 20 parking spaces removed or displaced by the plans for The Corner Meat Shop. Quinn said he planned to appear before the planning board in a few months with a newly designed, more attractive parking lot.

The design review board questioned the striped awning in front of the shop, but Quinn said his tenant felt it would attract customers, and after a conference with the board it was approved. Quinn also pointed out that the redesigned building would offer a ramp for the handicapped, a drainage problem at the rear of the building was corrected and spaces in the plaza not presently for parking, that could be used for that purpose.

Power said the board would require a bond or letter of credit to be posted for Phases II and III of the 100 Pond Street development. Dennis says there are 10 units in eight buildings in phase I, and the whole development will contain 40 units in 31 buildings.

Roberta Sawyer, associate of Atty. Charles Humphreys, presented the board with several covenants and agreements to be signed, which had been reached by conferences with the board over the past year; the board members signed them. Power acknowledged these had been drawn up by Sawyer for Thayer and had not been reviewed by Town Counsel.

DOANE STREET

Developer Walter Winchester appeared before the board regarding drainage on Doane Street property, where he plans to start work soon. The board and Winchester reached agreement on a $70,000 letter of credit. Winchester also said he wished to appear at another meeting of the board to discuss his property at the corner of Rte. 3A and Beechwood, across from Cushing Plaza, to explore the "best use of that land" which is zoned residential.

A previous attempt at re-zoning failed several years ago.

Winchester said he might be able to add "some of the Laugelle land" to the property, and he did not feel 10 single family houses might be the best use of the land. He mentioned offices, townhouses or apartment as possibilities. The board scheduled a June 15 meeting from 8 to 9:30 p.m. for discussion with him.

Developers Lanata and Crossen, of L&C Realty, 12 Parkingway, also discussed their 18 dwelling units in 17 buildings on Cedar Street next to the town landfill. They plan nine two-bedroom units, nine three-bedroom units and an optional swimming pool and Tennis Court. Power said they were putting conservation restrictions on land below the 50-foot contour.

SO. MAIN STREET ADDITION

Power is also concerned about the Fessler addition at the site of the Red Balloon on South Main Street. According to the building inspector Fassler was permitted to remodel a porch into a storage addition, but has applied to put a bathroom in the basement of the sewer connected building, and plans to use the addition as "office space" according to a request to the Sewer department.

Dramatic Club to present 'Plaza Suite'

The Cohasset Dramatic Club's spring show will be Neil Simon's modern three-act comedy "Plaza Suite."

Actually a series of three one-act plays, "Plaza Suite" was chosen as a Best Play in its 1967-68 Broadway production and is frequently performed by community theater groups.

This presentation marks the play's premiere in Cohasset.

The bride and groom will be played by Katie Miessner and Eddie Fee. Miessner is a student at Massachusetts College of Art and has designed several Dramatic Club posters, including the one for this show.

Fee first appeared on the Town Hall stage in "Scenes From American Life." Directing "Plaza Suite" is Phyllis Mahon and production manager is Carter Hill.

Performance nights at the Town Hall will be Thursday, May 12 to Saturday, May 14.

Carriage House School accepts '83-'84 registrations

The Carriage House School is currently accepting registrations for the 1983-84 school year. Applications are available at the nursery school, 23 No. Main St., Cohasset, or by calling 383-1100 or 383-9785.

The Carriage House School offers a two-day program, Tuesday and Thursday mornings, for three year-olds, and a three-day program, Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, for four year-olds.

Beginning in September extended days will be offered Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday until 3 p.m. Children must be either three or four years old by January 1, 1984.

Sally Atkinson is director of the school which was established in 1978.

Maria Plante, casino fighter ...

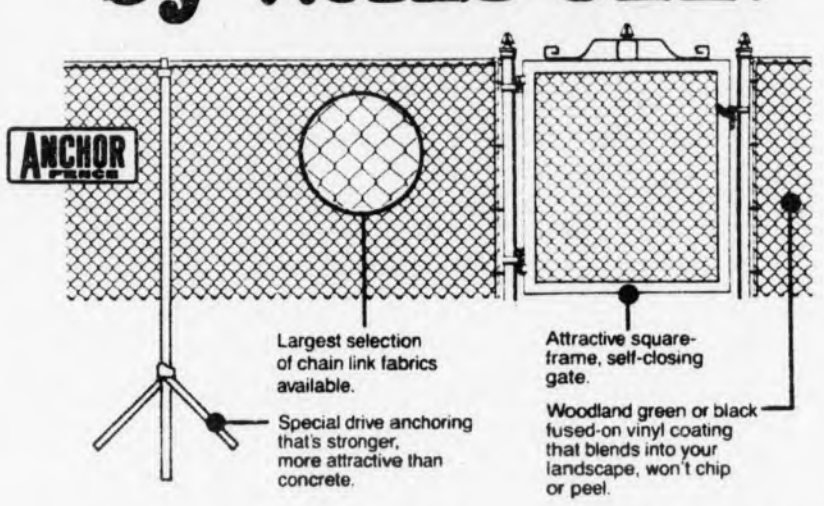
thought a minute.



"I'd like to see a lot of social ills taken care of. I'd like to see more family commitment for one thing — the opposite of the 'me generation.'

"I hope Hull will get going with redevelopment and not be crying for the relief that isn't relief.

"For myself personally, I'd like to be able to spend a day or a week alone with my husband. He works very, very hard, and the kids have never seemed to be the right age to be able to leave.

"Maybe we could spend a day on the beach in Hull. Without a casino."

James Watt's 4th of July choice deserves some support

By Lois Martin

Jim, Jim, Jim. Bless your heart. Don't you give it another thought. I'll take your part in this mess.

And the rest of you lay off. Jimmy Watt's wireless broke in the late 50s and that was when the Beach Boys were rowdy. Some shallow-minded people would let anybody on the Washington Mall for the Fourth of July celebration. Remember it's your Secretary of Interior who's speaking about the music for that day. It's his job, yea duty, to keep track of what happens on American soil. We've got to screen people who want to sing at the Nation's Birthday party.

What do you think this is, a land where just anybody can sing or entertain or even be there?

PATCHES

I'll brook no aspersions about Jim's choice of Wayne Newton for the head July 4th singer. Jim is our classic American, neat white shirt that probably never saw a ring around a collar, proper eyewear, hair receding as is in keeping with our mature male population.

He wants Wayne to sing. He's primarily interested in a family-type program. And Wayne's been in Vegas for years and years. There's a recommendation for you. Where else but Vegas comes to mind for family-type trips, your camping, your picnics and reunions.

Wayne's hair's been restrained to a brunette and let's not be smartmouth about his octaves. Tell you the truth, though, I've always wondered if a good whomp between the shoulder blades might not lower his voice a bit. But he's got the songs ready for the family Fourth..."Daddy, don't you walk so fast..."

The Beach Boys are about my age, I think. And people in the riotous 40s shouldn't be trusted to sing on the Mall. I know I shouldn't. Besides, the words to "Surfin' USA" are of questionable taste. And I know Jim's listened to the words of songs before making his judgment.

Hope he doesn't visit here too soon. We had a mother in town this week who was in the kitchen humming a catchy tune until her son asked her if she knew the words. She didn't. He told her the main phrase was an explicit invitation to make love.

Oh, my goodness. Back in the 50s songs and music used to hint at a personal relationship. Today's songs give you a graphic outline of physical activity. Publishers of anatomy textbooks could learn a lot from some of the songs.

But back to Jim. He chose Wayne I'm sure because the Andrews Sisters or Mitch Miller weren't available. I was yearning for the Platters myself. I wouldn't have broached the subject of Xavier Cugart with Jim because Carmen Miranda used to dance during his music in the movies. And her navel was clear as a bell on some of those midriff shorts.

Nelson Eddy would have been nice with Jeannette McDonald. But of course Wayne Newton's more inspiring. And personally I'd be shocked at anything so racy as the Beach Boys. Let a group like that in D.C. then they'd be wanting someone like the Everly Brothers or the Kingston Trio.

I heard tell Jim was going to let Lawrence Welk play until he heard Lawrence likes to smash his accordian at the end of his performance.

Isn't it comforting to know that the man who guards your land resources is mindful of the air above them, and what type music fills it.

Jim's probably a real swinger if he likes Vegas. I can't believe for a moment he'd have chosen Wayne without having caught a lot of his shows in Vegas. Or perhaps he doesn't get out at all and always wanted to.

His mother would be pleased with him. And as a taxpayer, I'm gratified that the White House communications have been dedicated to this kind of fracas.

I, myself, have other plans for the Fourth of July this year. Unfortunately I won't be able to see Wayne, wholesome as he's been presented by Jim.

I think I'll go to the beach.

Support group begins April 28

The Jordan H spital will be offering "The Next Step," a new support group for individuals experiencing the tragedy of fetal loss, beginning April 28.

"The Next Step" will be coordinated by Robert and Mary Ellen Mullholand of Hingham, who have been active in similar support groups since experiencing the loss of their own infant last year. The Mullholands will host an informational meeting for persons interested in joining "The Next Step" group on Thursday, April 28, at 7:30 p.m. in the Hospital's East Conference Room on the 3rd floor.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

Sometimes, having the entire family together for the evening meal is a major event. What with meetings, sports, or classes, lots of kids are conditioned to eating leftovers, raiding the refrigerator or wolfing down a few Twinkies before going on their merry way. Getting together around the table to talk over the day's happenings is all the more desirable when the meal includes Agnes McDonough's moist, delicious

SOUR CREAM CORN BREAD

1 c. sour cream
1 tsp. baking soda
1 stick butter or margarine
1/2 c. sugar
2 beaten eggs
1 c. flour
1 c. yellow cornmeal
1/2 tsp. salt
1½ tsp. baking powder

Mix 1 tsp. baking soda with sour cream and set aside. Cream butter or margarine and sugar until fluffy, add beaten eggs and stir. Sift dry ingredients together and add sour cream, mixing alternately with butter or margarine mixture. Beat 2 min. Preheat oven to 350 degrees and grease a 9" square pan. Pour batter into pan and bake 35 min. Cool and cut into squares.

As our good cooks and faithful readers know, swapping recipes is an important part of this column. Joanne Lawrence was so sure that a recipe for Thymed Butternut Squash had appeared in "From the Kitchen" that she called when she lost her copy. My search turned up nothing and so we'd be obliged if you have the recipe, you'd give me a call. As our reward, Joanne offers this family favorite for a quick and easy vegetable dish called:

POTATO ZUCCHINI CURRY

1/4 c. margarine
1 tsp. dry mustard
1 tsp. ground tumeric
3/4 tsp. ground cumin
3/4 tsp. ground coriander
1/2 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp ground red pepper
3 large potatoes, peeled, cubed
1 large zucchini, sliced thin
1 med. tomato, chopped

In large skillet melt margarine. Stir in next six ingredients. Cook, stir over low heat approx. 5 min. Stir in potatoes. Cover, cook over med/low heat 10-15 min., stirring occasionally. Stir in zucchini. Cover and cook 'til tender. Stir in tomato and heat through. Serves 4 to 6.

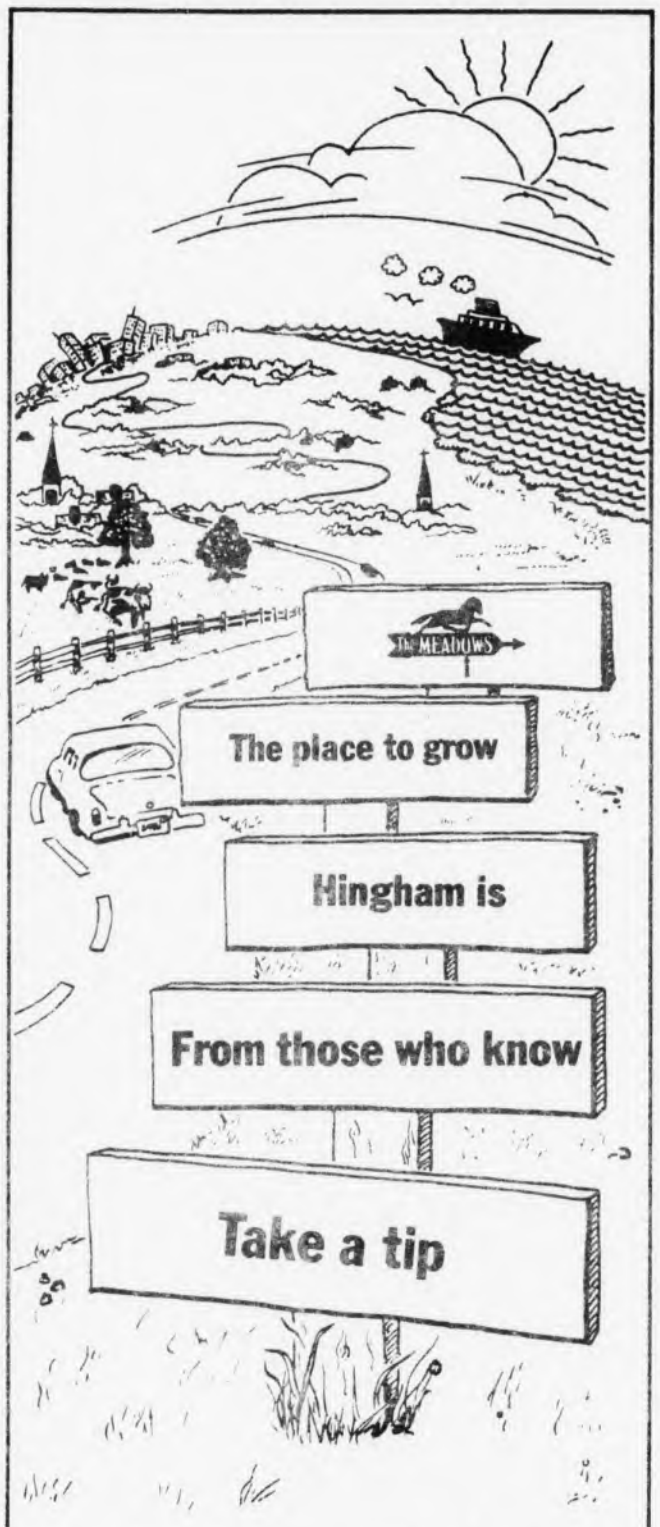
Music to one's ears are the words spoken in answer to a dinner invitation: "What can I bring?" Hospitality knows no bounds when guests prepare a dish and I was lucky this Easter when all I had to make for dinner was a dessert, vegetable and appetizer. Marge Ross's casserole would enhance any meal and is called



VEGETABLE MEDLEY

Cook 1 pkg. (9 oz.) frozen artichoke hearts
1 pkg. (10 oz.) frozen, cut green beans
1 pkg. (20 oz.) frozen small, whole onions
Follow label directions for each. Drain, Combine in 1½ qt. casserole with 2 T melted butter
1 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. coarse black pepper
Top with mixture of 1 c. fresh bread crumbs
2 T grated Parmesan cheese
2 T melted butter
Sprinkle on top. Bake in moderate oven (350) for 15 min., or until nice and hot.

April 27: Pack meeting — Olympics and Pinewood Derby awards at Deer Hill School, 7 to 8 p.m.

Tiger Cubs and any boy (ages 8, 9 and 10) presently in grades, 2, 3 and 4, interested in joining Cub Scouts are invited to attend Olympic night and participate in the fun.

Volunteers are needed to help continue the Cub Scouts and Boy Scout programs. Anyone interested in becoming a leader or committee member can attend the meeting. Every Cub parent is expected to donate three hours during the year to the pack if not serving in a den leader capacity.

Cohasset Pack #38 has had an enjoyable year watching the Cubs grow and learn. Next year we hope to see the same faces and some new ones to share scouting with. Remember Scouting's success depends on volunteers and parents' participation with their boys. We would like to thank all those who have contributed their time and love in promoting scouting. Everyone appreciated all the work and effort from our dedicated den leaders to our helpful committee parents.

A special thanks to Merle Brown and Jeff Fordsick for their hard work and organization. Jane Long, Nancy McLaughlin and Linda Farrag have spent many fun and long hours arranging and assisting with the committees for the Cubs. Cub Scouts in Cohasset has grown this year and will continue to with the fine help and enthusiasm the Pack #38 have shared. This is what Scouting is all about — caring and sharing. Thank you all for a wonderful year and have a happy summer! See you in September.

Child's vacation drop-in at Art Center

Children can spend their spring school vacation creating new works of art at the South Shore Art Center's "Child's Vacation Drop-in."

The "drop-in" allows kids the freedom to come to the center, 103 Ripley Road, any time during the week of April 18-22 from 10:30 a.m. to noon.

Lisbeth Koopman-Wyman, former art instructor for kindergarten through third grade at the Osgood School, will be at the Center to work with the kids on various projects. Open to ages 7 to 12, the participants may elect to paint, draw or make a collage and to also work on a week-long continuing "surprise" project.

A nominal fee will be charged for each day's participation. For additional information on the "drop-in", call the Center at 383-9548.

The popularity of wallpaper as an element in home decorating is largely due to its variety of colors, patterns and even textures. This most decorative of wall coverings is also one of the oldest. Its origins were in China and it was not until the fifteenth century that Europeans began to use it. The introduction of repeating patterns was made by Jean Papillon of France at the turn of the eighteenth century. Another development made by Europeans in the seventeenth century was the introduction of flocked wallpaper. This paper displays the look and feel of cut velvet and is still very popular to this day.

Walls can create the ideal environment and for those who want to create a bright, cheerful home, today's wallcoverings offer you an amazing variety to choose from. Here at BOUND BROOK PAINT & HARDWARE we have a wide selection of wallpaper for you to choose from and we feature the finest names in the industry. If you want to do the papering yourself we also have all the accessories to help do the job right. If you prefer to have it installed professionally we will be glad to refer you to someone. Cohasset Democrats participate in issues convention

By John McNabb, Jr.

Five Democrats from Cohasset were among the nearly 4,000 delegates to the Democratic State Issues Convention held last weekend in Springfield.

The Cohasset delegates generally agreed that issues did not get the attention they deserved.

Because of the time taken up by the six presidential candidates' speeches and for taking the presidential straw poll, delegates were not able to complete discussion of many proposed amendments to the party plattorm.

Former Vice President Walter Mondale won the poll.

"I'm disappointed, because I wanted to go to an issues convention," said delegate Donna McGee. Also serving as delegates from Cohasset were Edwin Tebbets, Priscilla Tebbetts, Mary Richard and John McNabb, Jr.

While the convention discussed and voted on amendments to the State Democratic Charter and platform changes on the death penalty, abortion, agent orange, labor rights, public libraries, economic growth and others, amendments concerning the war on El Salvador and Reagan's military budget were never dealt with.

McGee said when the quorum was questioned, the leadership of the state House and Senate pulled many delegates off the floor. The lack of a quorum led to a vote to adjourn — which ended the discussion on legislative rules changes opposed by the leadership.

McGee spoke in favor of a charter amendment that would double the size of the Democratic State Committee and open up the process of selection of state committee members. She is Chairman of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee and works in the State House as Administrative Deputy to the Governor's Office of Human Resources.

The real loser at the convention was the Progressive Caucus, which had proposed the amendments that couldn't be discussed, said McGee. The winner, she said, was State Party Chairman and State Senator Chester Atkins, because of the exposure he got by the straw poll.

The straw poll attracted nearly 500 local, state and national reporters, and brought a flurry of activity from all six candidates for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

Mondale won, with 29.3 percent of the vote. "Jobs," the write-in vote of labor and delegates who wanted to stay uncommitted and send an isssues message at the same time, got 25.6 percent.

U.S. Senator Alan Cranston of California came in second with 16.9 percent. Next, came Ohio U.S. Senator John Glenn, 15.3 percent, followed by Colorado Senator Gary Hart, with 10.5 percent.

Southerners Reubin Askew, former Governor of Florida, and South Carolina Senator Ernest Hollings, came in behind "no preference," with 12 and 17 votes, respectively.

The votes of Cohasset delegates were Donna McGee, "Jobs;" Priscilla Tebbetts and Edwin Tebbetts, Hart; Mary Richard and John McNabb, Jr., Mondale.

McGee said she voted for "Jobs" because she hadn't decided yet about the candidates, but wanted to send a message with her vote. "It was a protest vote," she said.

Tebbetts said he voted for Hart because "he seems like a very decisive and intelligent person." Priscilla Tebbetts said, "I liked the positions that he had." They both said they could support other candidates as well.

Richard supported Mondale because "I feel he can defeat Reagan. Because he's so experienced, he would stand a better chance. He deserves to be a front runner."

The best organized campaign on the floor of the convention was the campaign for the non-candidate, "jobs." Floor managers wore bright yellow jerseys, carried walkie-talkies, and lobbied delegates intensely.

The Mondale campaign organization was at first worried that "jobs" might top the ticket, but was relieved when Mondale came in a comfortable first.

Cranston appeared to move up from a fourth place before the convention to a second place in the poll. He had put about as much effort into lobbying delegates as Mondale did.

While the Mondale forces said that many "jobs" votes would have gone to Mondale if labor wasn't trying to keep their delegates uncommitted. Cranston also claimed some of the votes that went for "jobs."

"I think the "jobs" voters would support the candidates in about the same proportion that they got," said McGee, who doubted that they would all have gone to Mondale.

Some labor leaders have said privately, that while they supported Mondale, they would have to vote "jobs" because of an effort to keep labor uncommitted. The national AFL-CIO is planning to endorse a candidate for President this year, and needs to show they can deliver their vote.

All the candidates held parties for the delegates Friday night before the convention. "I had an opportunity to shake hands with and ask questions of all six candidates — to me that helped a lot," said Ned Tebbetts.

The candidates each spoke for 10 minutes before the convention, handed out literature at booths near the convention floor and worked the delegates on the floor before the vote. Most delegates seemed to agree that Mondale gave the best speech.

According to Tebbetts, an organized question and answer session with the candidates might have been more informative. McGee said she didn't attend any of the parties, but that she had met some of the candidates before.

Priscilla Tebbetts said she "was particularly pleased that the Governor, when he appeared on the podium, wore a Walk for Hunger sticker." She said she had the opportunity to thank Dukakis for agreeing to participate in the May 1 20-mile walk to raise funds for Boston-area charitable groups.

McGee said that "it's shocking that so many delegates didn't stay to the end," and proposed that when people run as delegate, they should be told they are expected to stay for the whole convention.

In all, the convention was a long, 11-hour event, with more tedium than excitement. The straw poll took precedent over the discussion of issues, but gave delegates a chance to have a role in the long campaign for President.

"I enjoyed participating very much," said Ned Tebbetts, summing up the general feeling of most delegates, from Cohasset and elsewhere.

Bryan Marks announces that Wednesday, April 27 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. the music department is holding a Music Parent's Nite in Room 116. This evening is intended to convey information on upcoming events (including the jr. band/chorus exchange concert with Franklin, N.H.) to all music parents and interested people. The evening will also include a couple of brief demonstrations by music students. Light refreshments will be available.

NEWS OF LAW CLASSES

Teacher Dorothy Wondolowski said her two law classes are going to Judge Rya Zobel's courtroom and the U.S. Federal Marshall's office the first week in May. Two students, Ellen Ciciotte and Katherine Duffy, have been invited to be guests of the American Bar Association in Dedham District Court. They will participate in a mock trial, tour probate court and have lunch with judges and members of the American Bar Association. These students are considering law as a career.

PSO to present board

The nominating committee for the 1983-84 PSO Executive Board has been formed and will soon present the slate of officers. The executive board will be elected at the PSO's first annual meeting Tuesday, May 24 at 7:30 p.m. in CHS room 107.

The nominating committee consists of Maria Plante, chairman, Ellen Gentile, Linda Gaston, Regina Schultz and Joan Shockman.

Recommendations for consideration by the nominating committee should be forwarded to Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Rd., 383-9263, by Wednesday, April 20.

Teachers Association to sponsor Ride-A-Bike

The Cohasset Teachers Association will sponsor the 12th Annual Ride-A-Bike Sunday, May 1 from 1 to 4 p.m.

This is part of a state-wide effort of the Mass. Teachers Association who support the efforts of the Mass. Association for Retarded Citizens. The M.T.A. dollar contributions have revolutionized services for Massachusetts' 180,000 mentally retarded children and adults. Past contributions have contributed to: Passage of Chapter 766, institution of early intervention for newborns, respite care, licensing of five institutions under Title 19 and independence for mentally retarded citizens living in the community.

The M.T.A. would like to raise $100,000 this year — making the total contributions to M.A.R.C. over $2 million — funds which help the human, civil and legal rights of the retarded citizens in Massachusetts.

The Coca Cola Bottling Co. donated bonds for the State's top-mileage riders.

Registration forms are available in all three schools. If you wish to participate in the ride, please have sponsors pledge the amount of money they wish to donate per mile. For further information, please contact the coordinators, Pat and Maria Plante, at 383-9263.

Osgood & Deer Hill Schools get visitors from Ireland

Welcome to three children from Ireland who are attending the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools. Jody Bray, grade 1; Carrie Bray, grade 2, and Lorin Bray, grade 5 are visiting their grandfather, Robert Freda of Jerusalem Road. They will go back to Ireland next summer.

They live on a farm in Kerry, near the Ring of Kerry in southwestern Ireland. The Bray's parents are looking at farmland here and in Canada. The children attend a grade K-8 single-room school in Ireland, and "find school here quite a contrast," reports Osgood School Principal Jack Creamer.

Information please

The libraries in Cohasset, Marshfield and Scituate are providing this column on questions asked at the libraries and on new information sources acquired. This week the column is written by Marilyn Pope, Children's Librarian at the Paul Pratt Library in Cohasset.

The children's room of the library is a busy place with students searching for information for their school fair projects. Classes visit the library with their teachers for instruction in the use of the library's resources.

Project-oriented instruction is most effective, especially if the class is small and has plenty of time for hands-on experience in finding answers in the adult and children's card catalogs, in the "Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature," in reference books, and in "The Magazine Index," a microfilm five-year index to 370 magazines.

In need of specific information, students are eager to learn where materials are located in the library, how the collections are organized (the classification plan), and how to read the catalog cards.

As an exercise, the students are given questions which they must answer from the catalog. Then they find the books on the shelves. Then they learn how to use the book — how to scan the fly-leaf, the back of the title page for more search words, the index and bibliography in the back of many books. Then they are given questions to answer from the books.

A few sample questions from the student library instruction exercise follows:

Q. Who or what is Ramses II and where can I find a picture?

A. The student looks in an encyclopedia to learn that Ramses II was a pharoah of ancient Egypt. The student can read further in an encylopedia, or a biographical dictionary. The student may look in the card catalog for the subject "Ramses II," or the subject "Pharoahs," or the subject "Egypt." Under the subject "Egypt-Antiquities," the student finds listed a book written by Stuart and with the shelf number 930.1. Finding the book on the shelf, the student looks in the index under "Ramses II" and finds page number 62 in bold print, indicating a picture.

Q. Can I find a magazine article about a time capsule?

A. The student can look for this subject on the new "Magazine Index." By pressing a button on the microfilm reading machine, the microfilm advances rapidly to the subject heading "time capsule." The student finds there is an article on this subject in "Omni" magazine, April 1979. The student writes down the citation and gives it to a library clerk who gets the magazine from storage. If the library does not own this magazine, the request can be sent to another library through the Regional Library System.

Q. How can I find out about the wreck of the St. John off the Cohasset coast?

A. The student can look in the children's card catalog under the subject "St. John" and find a fictionalized account entitled "Across the Sea from Galway," by Leonard Fisher. The student may find in the adult card catalog, under the subject "St. John," that the library has a passenger list of the Brig St. John in the library "vertical file."

The student may find further information in the card catalog under the subject "Shipwrecks." Subtitles of books listed under this heading show that one deals with New England — Edward R. Snow's "Great Storms and Famous Shipwrecks of the New England Coast." Checking the index of this book, the student finds several pages on the wreck of the St. John.

This process has come to be known among the students as the "library game." It's like a treasure hunt. As the years go by, students in upper grades come to the library confident of their skills in using the library for research.

In our emerging "information society," in which most jobs are in some area of producing, collecting, organizing, interpreting and disseminating information, these skills are essential for success in work and in life.

AFS auction coming April 30

What price would you pay for a basketball signed by the Celtics, or a baseball emblazoned with Red Sox signatures, or a hockey stick hosting Bruins' autographs?

What's the value of a tapestry donated by a local resident, or an Italian-styled home-cooked dinner for eight?

How do you rate the use of a Vermont ski lodge over a beautiful weekend? How would you like a gift certificate for a dinner at Hugo's, the Whitton House, or the Barnside Tavern? Or how about some new furniture for your dollhouse?

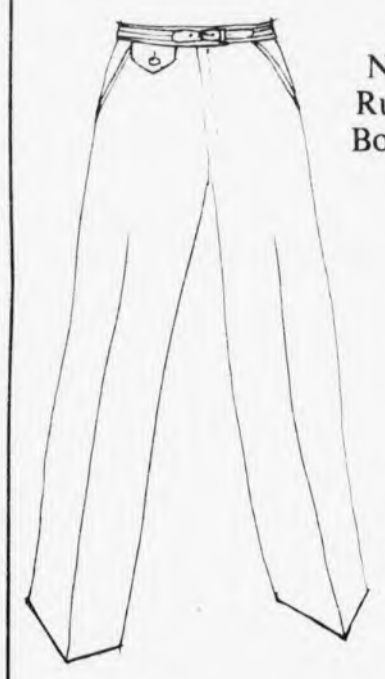
More than half the fun of the AFS (American Field Service) fundraising auction, says Jane Goedecke, is the delightful variety of gifts put forward for the auctioneers' gavels. Jim Urmson and Linton Young will add to the fun and excitement of the evening by being the volunteer auctioneers.

The Cohasset Chapter of AFS needs the funds to offer assistance to Cohasset High School students qualifying for extended stays in foreign countries under AFS international programs.

After last year's successful auction, this year's auction committee has been hard at work since February putting together entertainment, hospitality and over 80 great bargains. The fundraiser takes place in the Walton Rodgers Hall of St. Stephen's Church Saturday, April 30.

"We've designed the evening to be a lot of fun," says Jo-Ann Rossi, Cohasset AFS Chapter auction co-chairman. "Everyone coming to the auction has a chance to pick up some super bargains in a festive atmosphere, in addition to knowing that they are helping some great young people discover and learn to appreciate lifestyles in other parts of the world."

The evening will begin at 7:30 p.m. with a social hour and a silent auction, new this year. The silent auction will consist of selected items which can be bid on in writing. Later in the evening, the bids will be read, and the items will go to the highest bidders. There will be a wide variety of refreshments, including beer, wine, and soft drinks, available for bidders and viewers.



The more serious business begins when the auctioneers invite the first bids at 8 p.m.

It will be a night with something for everyone.

Satuit Bowlaway report

By Don Dwyer

Friday afternoons Norfolk Conveyors Bowling has the Eagles improving their league lead to a fifteen point lead over the Giants and the Cowboys. Jim Nagle leads all the men with an outstanding 109.3, followed by Bob Barrows with 106.9, and holding third spot, Al Wilson has a 103.2. (Al is the league president and we at The Bowlaway thank Al and everybody for a solid season). Delores Jenkins has the girls' high average holding a super 101.3. (Dee is one of our outstanding bowlers at The Bowlaway). Other outstanding scores are Jim Nagle with the high single of 164 and high triple with 392. The Eagles have the team high three with a 1605 and The Giants have team high single of 589. The stretch drive is now at hand. Good luck to everyone.

Thursday mornings Coffee and Donut league still has the Sankas leading by four points over The Jellies. The high average for the entire league has Marie Merritt leading all with a 98.9, and close behind Priscilla Sindanie has a 98.2. (Couldn't be any closer). Last week's highlights had Dot Bennett the "Star" of the week holding the high single with 141 and high triple with 335. (Dot also had three strikes). Coffee and Donuts sure do fit all these bowlers excellent showing from all of our Thursday bowlers.

Sunday mornings boys league has the team of The Pepsis leading all and pulling away with a fifteen point lead. (The Pepsis also won the first half). The winners so far have the team of Bryan Sheppeck, Greg Rogers, Scott Allen and Kevin O'Brien. The race for the high average boys is really something with Pat Connors leading with 102.4 over Alan Jenkins closely with 102.2. (Could be another last string of the season to decide the winner). Individual scores have Alan Jenkins with both high singles of 146 and high triple with 372. (Alan has been scoring great lately rolling an average over 120 for his last four weeks. Just great bowling, Alan, hope we can see you on T.V. someday). Other great scores are Pat Connors with 143, Mike James 138, Joe Deluca and Kevin O'Brien 135, and Greg Rogers with 134. Kevin O'Brien has 2nd high three with 368, followed by Pat Connors with 358, Bryan Sheppeck 339 and Mike James with 334. (I can see a lot of men's league material in the making).

Sunday nights Get-To-Gether ladies have the 7-Ups leading by six points with 64 wins and 32 losses. The Pepsis are second, four points in front of The Sprites and Colas. Individual class leaders are Jean Petkus leading them all with a commanding 105.4, followed by Karen O'Brien, Class B, with 94.5 and Leslie Roberts has an 86.9 to have Class C captured. High honors for individual bowling have Cindy Hazen exploding with a 161 single, followed by Marie Bergman with 146, Delores Jenkins 144, and Becky Colins with 140. Delores Jenkins has the league's high three holding a super 377, next Marie Bergman and Cindy Hazen are tied at 368, Heidi Hickman 367, Jean Petkus 357, and Jan Austin with 355. (These Sunday nighters, as you can see, are "burning" the lanes up with their torrid scores, just great all around).

Tuesday mornings Ivy League continues to have a dogfight for the leading team with The Sapphires leading by four points over The Diamonds with only three weeks to go. Class high averages are, Pat Torrey, Class A leader with a magical 110.2. (How many 110 bowlers do you know? Only one, says "Old Rip" and we have 'em). Beverly Lembo has "B" captured with a neat 101.6 and Sally Leato leads all in the "C" class with 95.7. Dottie Sunnerberg in a "closey" has the "D" leadership rolling a 90.2. Outstanding scores from last week were Pat Torrey with another good one, 366, followed by Midge Kuntz rolling 339, Beverly Lembo 330, Elaine Riddle 327, Linda Zimmer 319, Peg Barton and Priscilla Sindone 307, and Priscilla Shea with 302. (These "Ivys" have sure climbed to some outerspace scores).

A little note to everyone — The Bowlaway has a summer league for you, take your pick: Tuesday morning and night "Ladies", Wednesday night "Mixed Doubles," and Thursday nights "Mens League." Call us and join the fun.

Bowen was Cohasset's top hockey scorer

By Alana O'Brien

Senior Dan Bowen recently led the CHS hockey team to the Division II Quarterfinals of the State Tournament for the second consecutive year, a first a Cohasset High.

Bowen, a South Shore League all-star, is the all-time total career point scorer in CHS hockey history.

Dan was named offensive player of the week in the first week of the Schoolboy Eastern Mass Tournament.

Bowen was also named to the Hockey Night in Boston All-Star Team, along with teammate Rich Evans. THNIB All-Stars Division II played the north and were defeated 5-4 March 26. Bowen scored the team's first and third goals and teammate Rich Evans scored the fourth.

Coach Tom Burnell was pleased with Bowen's performances especially in the tournament games. Burnell acclaimed Bowen for being the offensive leader of the team.

Dan, a four-year varsity hockey member was also an all-star soccer player and is a member of the track team. He is interested in the service academics and hopes to attend Kings Point in the fall.

Dan Bowen — Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic Hockey team member.

Scituate Prelude Concert continues April 30

The Prelude Concert Series received its second grant from the Friends of the Scituate Library to fund a gala concert Saturday, April 30 honoring the Fifth Anniversary of the new library on Branch Street.

This performance, which will be the Boston area debut of the New York cellist Frederick Zlotkin, also marks the first anniversary of the Prelude Concert Series. Zlotkin's program will include Bach's "Suite No. 1 in G Minor" for unaccompanied cello, and works by Francoeur, Shostakovich and Franck. He will be accompanied by pianist Margo Garrett of New York.

Tickets for this concert, which will be held at 8 p.m. at the Scitaute Town Library, may be purchased at the Scituate Arts Association Gallery, Front Street, Scituate Harbor, at the door the evening of the performance or by calling 545-0238.

Season passes for the Prelude Concert Series are also available by calling the above number, or writing Prelude, Box 109, North Scituate, 02060. Other concerts in the Second Season series feature the Portland String Quartet on July 9; baroque violinist Jaap Schroeder on October 15, and the New York Cornet and Sacbut Ensemble in January, 1984. Season's subscribers receive priority seating for all performances, and enjoy "Meet the Performer" receptions following all concerts.

"The past two years have found me with little time to cultivate an active social life due to a rapid growth in my career and professional life. Since my day is long work-wise and my job is demanding – there is little time left to seek the social life that I would like. That's where Together came in. I respected their honesty, integrity and professionalism from the very start. As a result, I have met several people with the same interests and goals in life – not to mention the great times we have shared. Indeed, Together has filled a very important part of my life."

"I'm a busy professional and both my career and social life are important to me. I don't go to bars and I don't date people I work with. For me, Together has been an economical and time-saving way of meeting other compatible single adults. The counselors are sincerely concerned with introducing me to the kind of person I would like to meet. I recommend this service highly."

Report from Pakistan ... Part II

Here is the second letter from Philip Dormitzer who is on an archeological dig in Pakistan. He wrote it soon after leaving the city of Rawalpindi and setting up camp near an excavation site in Chingi, a region in northeastern Pakistan. This letter was postmarked February 17,

We have set up camp at Chingi, a locality near a canyon descending from mustard fields. Earlier in the day I went to the town of Chingi. To get to the town one must take a jeep over about 12 km of muddy roads. You pass by mud and straw villages, fields of mustard, grasslands and badlands. Along the road men till the fields with simple plows drawn by oxen, women carry water in jugs stacked up on their heads and camels and donkeys pass laden with enormous loads.

When one walks through the villages, children form a train of followers. Even when we work in the field, the local shepherds squat nearby and observe everything that we do. The streets of the villages are filled with animals roaming at will. Most of the homes, especially in the city, would be considered uninhabitable by American standards. In Rawalpindi people live in decaying buildings filled with piles of rubble.

The farther one gets from the cities, the more beautiful the countryside becomes. Yet, even in the most squalid places one is reasonably safe. Strict Islamic law is in effect. On the way to Chingi we were delayed while a man was publicly flogged until he collapsed, for rape. Many of the women are still in purdah. The men dress in what we call wami suits. These have enormous baggy pants covered to the knees by a long shirt. I have bought one myself — it is much more comfortable than my Western clothes.

We have raised two rows of tents near the site where we excavate. The fossiliferous areas are in badland — very dry, with canyons, cliffs, ridges and the like. At night we can hear the jackals calling. At our old site we awoke to the sound of the call to prayers being sung out from a local mosque. Our food is first rate. We have a Pathan cook and have a variety of curries served with chapaties — a Pakastani kind of bread.

It is difficult to describe what it is like here, since everything is so different. Almost nothing is exactly like it is in the U.S. My first few days here were tough because of jet lag and because one feels disoriented and out of place. When you walk along the streets of Rawalpindi, people stare, beggars jabber at you in Urdu and merchants push their wares all over the streets. The bazaars are in tiny, crowded alleys filled with people. Wares are scattered everywhere and shops consist of either tiny enclaves, carts or patches of street.

The lives that people lead here go at a much slower pace than in the U.S. When I went to the post office today, we stayed to have a cup of tea with the postmaster. A simple task like registering with the police takes more than an hour. Everything is done by hand here. At construction sites one sees men carrying pots of dirt around — not even using as simple a labor-saving device as a wheelbarrow. Where road construction is going on, men sit by the side of the road with hammers, breaking immense piles of cobbles into pebbles by hand.

I think that seeing the horrible lives that some people lead here will make me appreciate what we have at home. People's lives tend to be very simple and center around getting enough to eat. This is not to say that there is suffering everywhere. In Pakistan most people have enough to get by and probably work no more than we do. Actually they seem to spend much of their time relaxing; however, they do not have the freedom or variety of experience that we have.

CCC needs foster homes

Coastal Community Counseling Center is looking for foster homes for adults with emotional problems.

The people who are in need of a home range in age from 20 to 70 years old. They spend at least part of the dat at work or in a day program. They need a place to return to after work, and the warmth and companionship of living in a family.

A home provider can be a man or woman, single or married, work full-time or be unemployed.

Professional support and training are available. For more information, contact Joanne Johnson at 849-1220.

Toastworthy
The Pavilion at the all new Inn For All Seasons is going to be a tough act to follow . . .

You're invited to join us Wednesday, April 13 for the official opening of The Pavilion. All evening, there will be a champagne fountain, complimentary hors d'ouevres, and entertainment as a special way to introduce you to the beautiful new addition to the Inn For All Seasons. The Pavilion will do double duty as a function room for groups of up to 200 but also serves as an expanded lounge area. With it's skylight roof and atrium doors to the Inn's courtyard patio, it is a facility unsurpassed in the area. It's a tough act to follow.

Leave us your card
Leave your business card — or any card with your complete name and address — and you could win prizes ranging from a free drink to dinner for four in the restaurant. Drawings will be held daily throughout the weeklong celebration of The Pavilion opening. That's a tough act to follow.

Flip a coin with our bartender
Buy a drink in The Pavilion anytime between 12 Noon and 5 p.m. daily during our weeklong opening and you can flip a coin with our bartender and enjoy a second drink on the house if you win! That's a tough act to follow.

Something else new — our Muncheon Menu
The Pavilion features a brand new Muncheon Menu for items served in the lounge from 12 Noon until the kitchen closes. Onion rings, golden chicken fingers, spring rolls, potato skins and brochette of fresh vegetables are some of the selections from this all new menu. It's a tough act to follow.

And, in our restaurant . . .
In the famous Inn For All Seasons dining rooms, you'll find an all new menu with interesting new entrees and some of your old favorites as well. Our food has always been a tough act to follow.

Spring sessions begin at Community Center

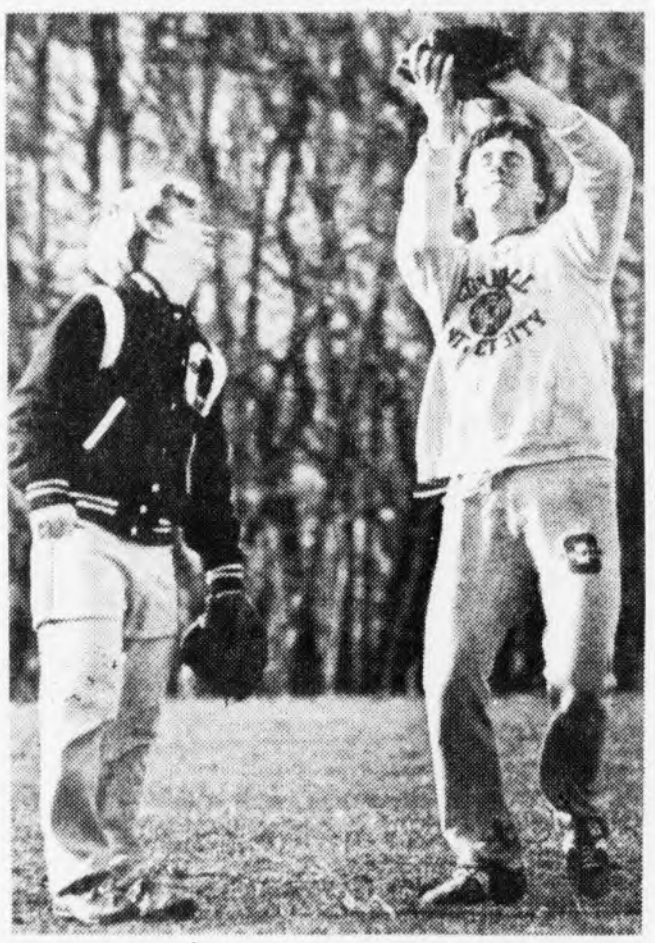
The spring session of courses for youths and adults are getting started at the Cohasset Community Center. There are still openings in many of the new and returning courses.

Claire Berman's Jazz class for grades 4 to 6 and 7 to 12 has been moved to Mondays. Dancers will learn snappy rhythms and dance to popular Broadway hits.

If tennis is your sport, Susan Dalrymple's six-week spring session will help you learn or improve your game. There is an excellent selection of days and times to fit a busy youth's schedule. Also good exercise is baton twirling. Kathy Narbonne will be instructing this class of six to 10 year-olds on Wednesday from 6 to 7 p.m.

Get ready for a summer job with a course in babysitting readiness by Paula Gartland. The class is Tuesday, 6 to 7 p.m. and covers activities relating to child play, safety and discipline combined with discussions to develop an awareness of the responsibilities of child care. This is a very worthwhile course at a nominal fee.

Another popular course available is cartooning by Marsha Serafin. The class will be held Monday from 4 to 6 p.m. Children will learn to create characters and discover the cartoonist's art of comic expression. Ages 9 to 16.



A new course being offered for grades 4 to 6 and 7 to 9 is model confidence and poise by professional model Andrea Kaplan. Participants will be taught to stand up and stand out by developing self-confidence. Instruction on appearance and poise, carriage projection and good grooming teaches the student to use their own best assets rather than following the crowd. Class times are Tuesday, 3 to 4 p.m. (7 to 9 grades) and 4:15 to 5:15 p.m. (4 to 6 grades).

For adults and teens there are openings in basic programming the micro way by Don Leary, Tuesday, 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.; consumer auto repair by Rich Silvia, Thursday, 7 to 9 p.m.; landscape design by Betsy Hoopes on Wednesday, 9 to 11 a.m.; interior design by Patricia Murphy, Wednesday, 10:30 a.m. to 12; furniture refinishing by Albert Meallo, Wednesday, 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. and stenciling by Nancy Clapp, Tuesday, 7:30 to 9 p.m., or Thursday, 9:30 to 11 a.m.

Want to learn how to design and fit your own personal pattern for designer pants and jeans? Janet McGlynn's class on pants and jeans will teach you Mondays from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Workshops and mini courses are also being offered with the first, Donna Kelly's Egg Basket Workshop. This will be held Monday, April 18 and 25 from 7 to 9 p.m. Students will complete a handsome round egg basket featuring the "Godseye" four fold lashing style rib construction with flat reeds.

For more information consult the bulletin or call the Center daily from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at 383-0088. The Center is located at 3 No. Main St., Cohasset.

Skipper baseball is in full swing — games and practices. Senior Lee Reid checks out teammate Jeff O'Neill's fly ball style at short stop position. Catch a game this week - see School News page for schedule.

Cohasset Sixty Plus Club President Sheila Kelly returned from her southern vacation. Other travelers have also returned to resume club activities, including the Don Whites, Grace Mitchell and Marion Moulton.

The next meeting will take place Thursday, April 21 at the Unitarian Parish House. Coffee hour at noon, followed by an important meeting.

Entertainment will be bingo games, due to the cancellation of a musical program.

On Wednesday, April 6, Sixty Plus Club members enjoyed a bus trip to Concord, Mass. to the famous Colonial Inn for lunch. The Inn is well known for its hospitality since 1716.

A three-day bus trip to Pennsylvania Dutch country is sponsored by Sixty Plus Club, scheduled for May 16-18. Reservations with a deposit should be made as soon as possible and sent to Carmela Silipo, 29 Wheeler Park, Scituate.

Amateur Gardeners to meet

The Amateur Gardeners of Cohasset will hold their annual meeting April 26 at 1 p.m. Members will vote for new officers for the coming year. Hostess will be Kay Talarico, co-hostess is Helen Goodwin.

Exterior Painting

Blistering and peeling is by far the most common type of house paint failure. Flaking and cracking occur when the wood itself swells and shrinks due to wetting and drying out. Unless a paint coating has both good adhesion and some elastic quality, it will crack under the strain; and thus let more water in from outside — which magnifies the problem.

Please feel free to call us about any paint problems you may have with your house.

Minot's Light . . .

By David Wadsworth
Cohasset Historical Society Curator

Some two and one-half miles directly to seaward from the entrance of Cohasset's harbor stands the gray sentinel called Minot's Ledge Lighthouse.

Familiar to South Shore residents for its unique signal pattern of 1-4-3, the granite tower of Minot's rises 114 feet above a small and nearly submerged rock named Outer Minot's Ledge. The ledge itself is but one of a line of treacherous sea ledges stretching along Cohasset's shore which for over two centuries claimed more than 100 great sailing vessels with their crews and passengers.

The present Minot's Ledge Light, built from 1855 to 1860, is not, however, the first structure built on that small and otherwise insignificant appearing rock.

Following an analysis of shipping losses occurring at the Cohasset Rocks, the U.S. Lighthouse Establishment decided in 1847 to build a lighthouse at Outer Minot's Ledge to warn mariners away from that fatal stretch of shore. Built to a design by Capt. William Swift of the U.S. Army Engineers, the first Minot's Ledge Light went into service January 1, 1850. Unknown to its builders and its resident keepers, that bright red all-iron structure was ill-fated and would last only two years before falling into the stormy sea. For on the night of April 16, 1851, Minot's Light was swept away by tumultuous waves and hurricane winds, and carried its two Cohasset keepers, Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson to their deaths.

Captain Swift's original design for the Minot's Ledge structure called for a type of iron construction known as a "pile" lighthouse. Long rods or "piles" were to be sunk securely into the rock base below, and atop these well-braced piles would stand the keepers' quarters and the great lighthouse lantern. At Minot's, the iron piles were some 40 feet in height, and the structure housing the keepers and their lantern extended to nearly 70 feet above the ocean.

Capt. Swift's theory said that with the "pile" tpe of structure, storm waves would pass harmlessly through the openwork of the light's lattice-like base far below the keepers' cabin and lantern. A valid theory, for this type of lighthouse has served well in numerous places over extended periods of time. But Minot's Ledge is not a typical location for a lighthouse.

Here at Cohasset, the full brunt of winter ocean storms falls upon the coastline, and Minot's Ledge often is called the most dangerous location in the world for a lighthouse, where giant waves pushed by gale winds go crashing across the low lying sea ledges on their way to Cohasset's shores. Captain Smith and the Lighthouse Establishment underestimated the power of the ocean at Minot's Ledge, and the results were catastrophic.

They were also almost immediately noticeable. The first keeper of Minot's Ledge Light was Isaac Dunham, a veteran lighthouse keeper and also a deeply religious man. He took his post at Minot's in December of 1848 and first lit the new lantern on New Year's night. It did not take Keeper Dunham long to discover that the new tower was not a safe place to be during a storm. The supposedly strong legs and braces twisted, shook, and swayed so much they became bent and loosened. In truth, the whole structure "lurched like a drunken man," as one keeper recorded. Captain Dunham's log included repeated prayers for his safety, for in each storm this veteran of the ocean's fury feared for his life. Keeper Dunham placed his fate in the hands of the Almighty and prayed that the lighthouse would not fall, this time.

After repeated appeals to government authorities for additional bracing to the structure's frame, calls that went largely unanswered, Capt. Dunham resigned his post on October 7, 1850, just six months before Minot's fell into the sea. The next, and last keeper of the first Minot's Light was another seafaring veteran, Capt. John Bennett, who initially had discounted Dunham's warnings. Bennett soon learned the truth, and was appalled at the condition of the unsafe structure. Again, appeals for more bracing went unheeded, and Minot's Light became more and more dangerous.

The end came during a fierce gale in April, 1856, the worst late winter storm experienced in many years. Ironically, Keeper Bennett was ashore when the storm struck and the light was manned by its two Cohasset assistants. Keepers Wilson and Antoine knew that night was to be the last one for the tower and for themselves. Shortly before it fell, they penned a note and sealed it in a bottle. The text read simply, "The light won't last over tonight. She shakes two feet each way now." A fisherman found the note and read it not long after its authors had perished in the sea.

As the storm progressed, anxious watchers on shore feared for the safety of the two trapped keepers. Long after darkness obscured the doomed tower, its fog bell could be heard ringing clamorously, then silence. Later that night, Minot's went over, its great iron legs twisted and sheared off by the force of wind and wave. Keepers Antoine and Wilson plunged into mountainous seas to begin a desperate swim for the mainland, almost three miles away. Neither survived the ordeal, for the body of the first was found later at Nantasket, and that of the second was found high atop Gull Rock, a small ledge he had managed to reach near Scituate's Glades. It was there that Keeper Wilson perished, for there was no shelter from the storm's fury.

Following the disaster at Minot's Ledge, the U.S. Lighthouse Establishment was extensively reorganized and placed under a board of professional military engineers. The new granite lighthouse at Outer Minot's was one of their first efforts, and it became an engineering triumph of its time.

The memory of the loss of the first light has been preserved by the Cohasset Historical Society in its Maritime Museum, where relics of the original iron-pile lighthouse have been gathered in a small but significant collection. It was 132 years ago this month that local residents picked up from the beaches some small part of the first Minot's Ledge Lighthouse.

Historical Society begins 1983 museum season

The Cohasset Historical Society begins its 1983 museum season with a series of regularly scheduled Open House afternoons at its newly restored Lothrop House on Summer Street. Starting April 5, the Lothrop House will be open on the first and third Tuesdays of each month throughout the spring and summer from 2 to 4 p.m.

Hostesses will be present to guide visitors through this fine old Georgian mansion house, where antique furniture, home furnishings and works of art are on display.

Built in 1823, the Caleb Lothrop House, named for its builder, was the residence of the Lothrop family for more than a century and a quarter. The Cohasset Lothrops were descended from Colonel Thomas Lothrop, the town's highest ranking Revolutionary War officer, and from Rev. John Lothrop, a Puritan minister from Kent, England, who arrived in nearby Scituate in 1634.

Caleb Lothrop (1799 to 1862) was a shipowner and ship chandler, and owned a maritime business at Cohasset Harbor. His son, John Quincy Adams Lothrop, (1824 to 1894) was one of Cohasset's leading citizens and a devoted public servant throughout his lifetime.

Among works of art at the Lothrop House are two original primitive watercolor paintings of Cohasset scenes, circa 1815 to 1823, by Sarah Young Lothrop; an oil painting of Cohasset Harbor by the late 19th century painter Frank Shapleigh, and two paintings of the harbor by Cohasset artist McIvor Reddie.

Portraits of members of the Lothrop family also are on display, as are several antique clocks, 19th century furniture and numerous memorabilia of early Cohasset.

The Cohasset Historical Society invites South Shore residents and visitors to drop in during the Tuesday afternoon Open House series for a unique and informative look at 19th century New England life.

If you knew the facts about leasing, you'd never buy a car again!

For some unknown reason, the many advantages of leasing a car versus buying one continues to be one of the best kept secrets in the automobile business. Furthermore, a longstanding misconception states that you have to own or be in a business to lease a car. Not true! Anyone can lease. And most people should.

Come in and let us prove to you that leasing is truly the intelligent alternative to buying a car.

Violations continue to plague Cedar St. dump

By Patricia Anne Walsh

For weeks the area east of the capped hill at the Cedar Street Dump, where Cohasset residents throw their trash into dumpsters has been covered by water.

Two winters ago citizens drove down into the area to dispose of their refuse. They would need boats to navigate the waters now.

Fred DeFeo, Chief Engineer of E.J. Flynn Engineers, Inc., reported to state environmental officials April 5 that the dump site "continues to be operated in serious violation of state regulations." He said " . . .there continues to be a significant amount of windblown litter to the north and west wooded areas around the expansion area. There is also a larger amount of windblown material existing to the east of the closed portion of the landfill site and this material has been carried a significant distance into the wooded area by the surface water which has ponded in that area."

DeFeo said, "The surface area of the completed landfill lifts continues to be improperly covered, and have significant depressions which will allow rainwater to pond and leach into the covered refuse."

The trash should be compacted and covered daily to prohibit the infiltration of water which could lead to a future leachate problem, according to the report of the Board of Health in the 1982 Town Report.

Developers Lanata and Crossen are developing the area east of the dump. They have planned 18 units for Cedarview. Joseph Crossen alleged last week that the landfill litter, including a hot water heater one quarter to one half mile in on their property, and he has pictures of several piles of trash which are arrowed to a large contoured plan of the area.

Crossen said he wrote a letter in March, asking to sit down with the town and discuss his problems, but has received no reply. He has not yet brought any suit against the town. He would prefer to discuss differences amicably.

The Mariner requested the minutes of the board of health since January, and copies of correspondence with Lanata and Crossen also known as L & C, and C & L Realty, from the Board of Health Secretary, Friday. Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos refused to

Henderson rules Gwinn's actions illegal

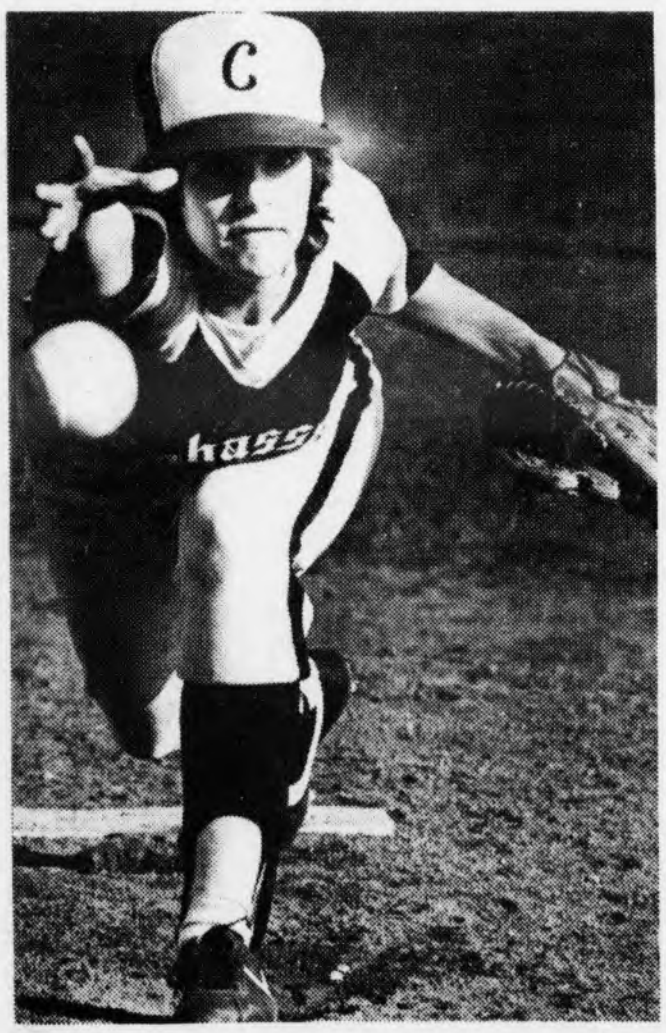
After a busy and furious week sewer commissioners actions and reactions, Town Counsel Richard Henderson has ruled the actions of former Sewer Commission Chairman Joseph Gwinn illegal and nullified his action to commit Cohasset to acceptance of a $1.1 million to construct a large center sewer plant.

In addition, new commissioners Edward Guild and new chairman Charles DeSantis voted to restrict future actions by Gwinn.

Subsequently, Gwinn has written to the Norfolk County District Attorney asking him to rule on DeSantis' authority as chairman to call an emergency meeting under the open meeting law.

DeSantis called an emergency meeting of the commission Thursday, April 15 at 8 p.m. Among the 20 residents present were four selectmen: Mary Jane McArthur, John DeBassio, Clifford Mitman and Frank England.

Associate Town Counsel Stephen Ryder was also in attendance. He said Town Counsel Richard Henderson had gone salmon fishing for 10 d.ys.



Former chairman Joseph Gwinn immediately began protesting: "This is an illegal meeting." Gwinn said he hadn't been notified by the board. Gwinn's wife, Pat, said she had been home, and had not received a call.

DeSantis said he had instructed the commission secretary to call Gwinn and notify him at noontime. DeSantis said, "Joe, you are here." Gwinn claimed he only knew of the meeting because he had been informed by a confidant.

The next morning, Secretary Marion Doublas, said DeSantis had told her to call Gwinn to notify him of the meting.

However, she said, Manuel Salvador, Chief Operator of the Sewer Plant, had telephoned Gwinn

Rep. Murray to drop jogging bill

By Mike Berger

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray will give up the fight to ban joggi . at night and just before sunrise.

But her motive behind the bill, which received statewide media attention just prior to the Boston Marathon, was successful.

"Since it has been reported, I have noticed more people running at night with reflectorized vests or white. At least I hav raised people's awareness of running at night," said urray, a Cohasset Republican legislator.

"I'm glad it got the tention it did. Runners have to be aware of what it's lik. .or a motorist to come on a jogger. Runners ought to be wearing reflectorized clothing, vests or footware," she said.

Murray's original bill would have banned jogging anytime after dusk and or half hour before sunrise. Violators would have been fined up to $25 for an offense.

This bill was given an adverse report by the Public Safety Committee. Murray is expected to co-sponsor a police chief's bill which would require reflectorized vests for running.

Murray filed the bill along with companion legislation to ban jogging with headphones and jogging during stormy weather.

"We've had too many close calls with joggers. I've had seven or eight myself. Our roads are narrow, windy and many of them don't have sidewalks. And when you have earphones on, you can't hear. You can't hear a car behind you," Murray.

Many joggers said they don't need state legislators telling them when they can and when they can't run. But national running coach Bill Squires said he likes the concept of the legislation because the sport's image is sometimes hurt by some runners who disregard basic rules of safety.

Cohasset's week...

Sweeney elected

Barbara Kern, one of the three members of the Board of Health reported that Marilyn Sweeney was elected Chairman, and Dr. Michael Bliss was elected Secretary of the Board of Health at their reorganization meeting. Sweeney was not present according to one observer of the meeting.

Cohasset sewer violations

Sewer Commissioners reported the State had passed an Act increasing the penalty for violation of the rules and regulations of sewer commissioners in Cohasset. The legislation, was signed into law by Governor Michael Dukakis March 31. It amends previous legislation so as to increase the fines for violating rules of the Cohasset Sewer Commission from $20 to $300.

McArthur elected chairman

Saturday, April 9, Cohasset elected three new members to a five-member Board of Selectmen. The board, prior to expansion by town meeting had consisted of three members.

At the 8 p.m. reorganization meeting April 12, remaining members Mary Jane McArthur and Rocco Laugelle were joined by newly elected John DeBassio, Clifford Mitman, and Frank England.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza directed that any member could nominate a chairman. Laugelle nominated McArthur, and England seconded the motion. Lanza did not ask if there were any other nominations, nor did he call for any discussion. Laugelle, England, and Mitman then voted for McArthur, and McArthur and DeBassio abstained. Mitman was then elected Vice-Chairman, before 8:05 p.m.

Since the 50 member audience had trouble hearing, Richard Barrow suggested they use two microphones. Barrow said after the meeting that they needed a mike for each selectmen and Lanza to be properly heard in the downstairs hall.

When asked for an explanation of his abstention last Sunday, DeBassio said "I really would have preferred, and I expected some discussion. The speed with which that process took place was something I would never have anticipated."

England, not Lanza as reproted by the Patriot Ledger, recommended at the meeting that the Selectmen operate under Robert's Rules and the state's open meeting law.

Chairman McArthur says she plans to have monthly meetings where citizens can give input, discuss problems, or make suggestions.

Firefighter hearing

Selectmen were scheduled to render a decision this week regarding a three-day suspension of firefighter James Runey. Runey appealed the suspension to selectmen, saying he had not abused his sick leave, as charged by Fire Chief Martin Dooley.

Chief Dooley had suspended Runey for three days and refused him his regular pay and extra compensation for an overtime detail.

According to the chief, Runey called in sick March 29 but attended an executive board meeting with the chief the same day. He was also seen fighting a fire that night at the home of selectman Mary Jane McArthur.

The following day, Chief Dooley saw Runey driving on Rt. 3A although the firefighter was still out on sick leave.

During last week's public hearing before selectmen, Runey said he was off duty March 29, but phoned in sick March 30 and 31. He had been suffering recurrent pain and stiffness in his knee, he told selectmen.

Runey said he was driving by McArthur's house with two other firefighters when they saw the chimney fire. He told selectmen he fought the blaze at risk to his health.

Shellfish Constable

Last week, selectmen appointed Harbormaster Harry Ritter interim shellfish constable. The appointment will be effective until selectmen make a permanent appointment to the post.

Greater Boston walk

Several Cohasset residents are among thousands who are joiniing Governor Michael Dukakis in the Greater Boston Walk for Hunger on Sunday, May 1.

Funds raised by the Walk go toward meeting the increasing needs of 45 Greater Boston feeding agencies (food pantries, soup kitchens, and shelters), 10 local hunger education groups, and 5 overseas self-help food projects.

This grass-roots effort, which will start for the 14th year at 8 a.m. on the Boston Common on May 1, is sponsored by Project Bread. Information about the Walk may be obtained by calling the Project Bread office at 227-3796 or by contacting Priscilla Tebbetts at 383-1662.

Cohasset residents already committed to the Walk for Hunger are Carol Martin, Lisa Clinton, Kristen Contis, Lisa Gallagher, Elizabeth Williams, Donna McGee, Ned Tebbetts, David Leptich, Sandra Steele, Mark Steele, and Priscilla Tebbetts.

Tom O'Neil, president of the Cohasset Teachers Association, and Maria Plante, coordinator of the 12th annual Ride-A-Bike program, holds on to son, Peter, eight years old.

Radio theft, vandalism arrest

A Wareham man has been sentenced to 18 months in prison regarding a break into a Route 3A auto dealership.

March 21, Cohasset police discovered several cars with doors open, windows smashed and radios missing. They arrested Scott Machado, 19, of Wareham who was hiding and charged him with three counts of breaking and entering into a motor vehicle, malicious damage to personal property, larceny of more than $100 and possession of burglary tools. Officer John Small spotted the damaged cars at Autohaus, Inc., 742 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. Michard received an 18-month suspended sentence for four counts of malicious injury to personal property, 18 months in prison for three counts of breaking and entering in a motor vehicle in the nighttime, a one-year concurrent sentence of unlawful possession of burglarious tools, one-year concurrent sentence for larceny over $100 and was ordered to pay $3500 in restitution to Autohaus.

The incident marks a rash of radio thefts recently as this week's police log reports several more incidents throughout town.

Police Chief Joseph Kealey said car radio thefts are a common crime to Cohasset as larceny of bicycles is in the summer. He urged motorists to continue to lock their doors and call police if suspicious activity is noticed.

Community Center meeting

The Cohasset Community Center will hold its annual meeting Monday, April 25 at 8 p.m. in the Function Room at the center.

All members are hereby notified and invited to attend. Wine and cheese will be served.

Dead seal spotted

Cohasset Animal Control Officer Richard Yocum found a 60 pound, four foot dead seal off the point at Cunningham Bridge Thursday. Preliminary autopsy found the seal died of a bird virus. Three weeks ago a viral infection apparently caused four dead seals to wash up in Humarock and Minot Beach. A New England Aquarium spokesman said a flu virus is affecting a group of seals at one time and dead seals have been spotted in southern New England and Cape Cod.

Those who spot more beached seals should call the Aquarium during normal business hours at 742-8830 or the emergency number, 742-8834 after hours.

Aquarium personnel will come to the site to treat a sick seal or to pick up dead ones. People should not touch a dead or sick seal, said Donna Buyers of the Aquarium, because when they are sick, "they will bite and it may be a nasty bite."

CHS seniors to present 'Kaleidoscope'

The Senior Class of Cohasset High School will present "Kaleidoscope," an original revue conceived by JoAnn Fichtner and Scott Ketcham, May 5-7.

The show will open with a rousing number from "Hair" and close with the spectacular finale from "A Chorus Line." Sandwiched in between will be skits, solos, chorus numbers, dramatic scenes and lively dancing from Broadway's finest musicals.

The vocal and drama director for this promising and spirited evening will be Scott Ketcham. A graduate of Cohasset High School and Williams College, Scott has been seen in many local community theatre productions and is a member of the First Parish Church choir.

"Kaleidoscope" will be choreographed by JoAnn Fichtner who has been responsible for many outstanding performances at Cohasset High School and Boston College and has long been a favorite of the students.

Sandy Kravette, a recent graduate of Cohasset High School and Boston Conservatory of Music, is band master.

The students are fortunate to have the expertise of Clark Young on the light boards.

Beth Goff, director of the CHS's 1982 production of "L'il Abner," will help with production, while Ketcham and senior class member, Robert Driscoll, are responsible for the set design and execution.

Eric Christiansen, also a member of the senior class, will donate his talents in photography.

Curtain time is 8 p.m. and tickets are $3.

Social Service League annual meeting

The Cohasset Social Service League, a non-profit, voluntary organization serving Cohasset residents invites all residents of the town to its annual meeting, Wednesday, April 27, at 12:30 p.m. at St. Stephen's Parish Hall, 16 Highland Avenue. The subject of the speaker, Warren Dahlin, is "A Helping Tradition: A Hope for the Future."

Warren Dahlin is the Director of Elderly Services for Brockton Area Multi-Services, Inc. and runs the Dorn-Davies Senior Center in Brockton. He is a registered occupational therapist with a Masters of Science degree from Boston University and a Bachelors in Psychology from Nasson College.

He is currently a clinical faculty member at Tufts University and teaches in the Health Administration Department at Stonehill College in Easton, Ma.

Mr. Dahlin is a well known expert on aging who has lectured throughout the country on a positive approach to aging, "good grief" and the clinical aspects of Abuse of the Elderly. He has recently completed work on two national documentary films dealing with the process of aging.

The motto of the Social Service League of Cohasset is "The volunteer spirit is alive and well," and the organization's activities prove the truth of this saying.

The League operates the Meals on Wheels service, Senior Shuttle bus, Youth Employment Service, the Cohasset Consignment Shop, Nursing Services with their Keep Well Clinics and Geriatric Counselling.

The Annual Meeting is a good opportunity to find out exactly how the League carries on its business, whom it benefits, and how any resident can become a part of its operations.

The League hopes that as may residents as possible will accept their invitation to attend the April 27 meeting.

Percussionist Sorrentino featured

Sunday, April 24 at 4 p.m., the South Shore Conservatory will present an afternoon recital by percussionist Edward Sorrentino of Cohasset, a faculty member.

The varied program will have two sections. The first half will feature contemporary classical music for which he will be joined by other faculty members. After intermission a seven piece band will join him in a program of Jazz-Rock selections. There is no charge for admission to this concert which will be held in Cox Hall at the school off 19 Fort Hill Street in Hingham.

Ed Sorrentino attended schools in Cohasset and Belfast and graduated as a percussionist from Berklee College of Music in 1979. He has played extensively as a professional with such groups as Bobby Hebb, The Four Freshmen and the Tony Bruno orchestra. A member of the Music Educators National Conference, he has taught in the Hull and Cohasset schools and has served as Jazz/Rock clinician for the Mass. Public Schools and the Maine Public Schools.

He has also done music therapy work with emotionally disturbed children at the Boston University Mental Health Center. He teaches privately and at the Duxbury and Hingham branches of the South Shore Conservatory.

The South Shore Conservatory is funded in part by the Mass Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Ride-a-bike planned

The Cohasset Teachers' Association launched their campaign to sponsor the 12th Annual Ride-A-Bike for the Retarded. The event will be held on Sunday, May 1 from 1 to 4 p.m. at Town Hall.

This is part of a state-wide effort to support the efforts of the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Citizens. Since the start of this state-wide effort, the Massachusetts Teachers have raised $1.9 million and this year hope to contribute $100,000 to bring the total over the $2 million mark.

Contributions have supported over 180,000 mentally retarded children and adults in our state: Passage of Chapter 766; Instituting early intervention for newforns; Providing respite care; Licensing of five institutions under Title 19 and Independence for mentally retarded citizens living in the community.

Residents may help by riding on May 1, sponsoring a rider or donating to the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Citizens through this campaign.

Each year, Cohasset's contributions averaged $2,000 or more. The CTA would like to double this amount in 1983.

Cancer Control month

Gov. Michael Dukakis has proclaimed April Cancer Control Month, and urged all citizens of the Commonwealth to support the American Cancer Society's Cancer Crusade this month.

"This year, 24,000 Massachusetts residents will learn that they have cancer," Gov. Dukakis said. "Thanks to advances in research and treatment, however, three out of eight of these patients will be cured of their cancers.

☐Scott ("Elvis") Anderson is on the road again...this time he and his band (Roy Buchanan's band) are going to tour Canada. Upon returning, Scott and his band will appear in Boston. To catch their act, they will be at Jonathan Swifts in Boston May 11.

☐Although John McNabb was busy at the Democratic Convention recently, he didn't forget the Cohasset elections. As soon as he was sure the votes were counted, he telephoned Peter Pratt for the results. That's dedication!

☐Anyone who has been in the Strawberry Parfait recently has surely noticed two things. There are no ashtrays (Carmen has given up smoking) and Carmen shaved off his beard. Must say he looks dashing.

☐Nancy Sladen was missed at the polls during the town election. She is recuperating from recent surgery and will be out and about very soon. Rose Pape was there, though...even though she wound up in Mass. General after her illness in Florida, she willed herself to get better in time for the elections.

☐News from Golden, Colorado. Peter Lawrence, son of Paul and Joan Lawrence, grandson of Leonard and Adelle Lawrence and Bruce and Mary Edmonds of Cohasset is an accomplished skier. Peter placed an overall third place in the Rocky Mt. Division and Central Division of the nine and under of the USSA (United States Ski Association) Junior Olympics at Winter Park, Colorado. This is Peter's first year with the USSA. He took a third in the giant slalom, a sixth in the slalom, and a third in the duels. To participate in this race he had to qualify by being in the top 25 percent of the Rocky Mt. and Central Division of the USSA. Earlier in the season Peter broke his nose while practicing, but it didn't seem to slow him down!

☐Hope that Joanne Winters is feeling a lot better as she reads this (everyone thinks you've been in "Sick Bay" long enough, Joanne).

☐The Curley family had beautiful weather for their two week vacation in Florida and had a great time visiting their friends and relatives while they were there. Anne and their son Jim have been in "sick bay" ever since their return. Within a day of each other they came down with a sickness and have had to spend the last two weeks confined. They were last seen "on the mend" in the doctor's office, trying to figure out ways to get back to their jobs. Now you know they're feeling better.

☐If you want to see someone that really moves, watch John Casey ride a bike. I passed him the other day, made one stop and then went onto Scituate. He was already there!

☐Charlie Davis, head of the math department at CHS, is still walking on air after his son won his division in the Cohasset Road Race. Charlie was our track coach for many years but retired last year in order that he might watch his own children participate in track events at Marshfield High.

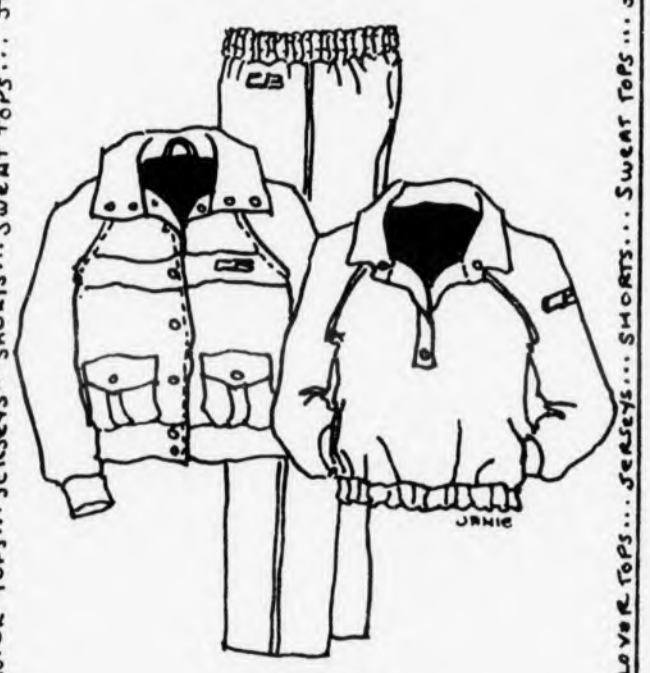
☐The Mariner's Greg Derr has a lot of fishermen out trying their luck after last week's fishing report...Greg is an avid fisherman himself.

☐J.J.'s opened recently, a sure sign of Spring.

☐Christine Magner recently returned from Fort Lauderdale where she found the sun was wonderful and the social life a lot of fun. Christine is a student at Providence College and claimed she saw more fellow students there than she sees while at school. The one thing she found lacking was good home cooking, something Mom, Jean, made up for as soon as she returned.

☐Had some nice news about Carla (Pearson) McCormick last week. Carla is the daughter of Eric and Evie Pearson who has been living in New Hampshire since her college days, and is a happily married Mommy with a new venture underway. Cala has bought a new gift shop in New London called "Serendipity." It is right near Colby-Sawyer College and caters to the college students (and all of us who are young at heart as well). Carla has always been a super worker and an active person. She should do well in her new business, especially with her ability to meet people and her "gift of gab." (Wonder where she gets that from).

☐Speaking of "leaving the nest," John McCullough did so last winter when he accepted a job in Buffalo, New York. John loves his job, has a "great set-up for an apartment" and is extremely glad that Buffalo had a mild winter. The frosting on the cake is this week, however. He has tickets to the Buffalo vs. Bruins. Though he'll surely be in the minority cheering our Bruins on, don't think for one minute that they won't hear him... being a loyal fan, he yells loud and often.



☐Chris Laugelle may be housebound but that isn't stopping him from doing what he wants most...he's calling all over to various colleges for applications and is determined to be accepted by one of them. He has a big cheering section rooting for him. Good luck, Chris.

Historic Commission meeting draws questions

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Do three officers of an appointed commission have the "right" to make up a list of nominees for appointment to the commission without calling a meeting, consulting other members, or asking members if they wish to continue serving?

Do appointed members of a town commission have the "right" to publically demand that three officers of a commission resign?

Is it proper to say that new members voted as appointees by the selectmen, are not official memers because they have not accepted their appointments in writing as required by the Bylaws?

There are three questions to be answered by the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission Members.

According to the 1981 Town Report the members of the Cohasset Common Historic Commission, appointed by Selectmen after the April 1978 Town Meeting were: Barbara Weisenfluh 1982, Carolyn F. Horn 1982, Carol Martin 1982, Rowland Williams 1982, Walter C. Paulding 1983, Thomas E. Atkinson, 1983, Elizabeth E. Stevenson 1983, Peter J. Wood, Chairman 1984, and Charles C. Wheelwright 1984.

The 1982 Town Report lists Atkinson, Stevenson, Wood, Wheelwright, Weisenfluh, and Williams. It does not list Paulding, Horn or Martin as members. It does add the names: W. Chester Browne 1983 and Catherine Young 1985.

Selectmen appointed architect W. Chester Browne several months ago to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of architect Paulding. The town Bylaws require that one member be an architect, one a realtor and one a member of the historic society, as well as four members living in the common historic district.

The letter of appointment from selectmen to Browne did not tell him that he was required to accept the appointment in writing. Selectmen never did send letters to Young or another recent appointee, according to Selectmen Chairman Mary Jane McArthur. "They may have heard word of mouth or through news media reports of our meeting," she added.

At a commission meeting April 12 with about 20 citizens attending, Patricia Murphy said that the bylaws may be inconsistent in regard to lights and lighting fixtures.

The bylaws require that exterior architectural changes, including color, require applications by homeowners to the commission for approval.

The media had reported Carol Martin had painted her house a "sandy gray" and Nicholas Manganaro had erected a fence for a horse housed in his large yellow barn. Manganaro said he was not notified of the hearing where his case was discussed before the media.

Caroline Horn resides in a natural brown house, but recently changed the trim to a beigy tone with celery shutters and pumpkin brick front door," said Atkinson and Martin.

Horn said, "I am too upset to discuss anything."

The majority of the houses around the common are white.

Marian Atkinson said, "People on the commission are so hung up on paint, fences and door latches they have forgotten the real purpose, which is neighborliness, brotherhood and love."

Manganaro asked for the resignation of Wood who acknowledged his letter to selectmen regarding appointees on official stationery had been an "error."

Wood said Manganaro should not make such a demand "because you are not a member of this commission."

Manganaro left the meeting. Browne and Young left the meeting when Atkinson questioned their standing as members if they had not accepted in writing.

Thomas Atkinson said, "I am a member of this commission, and I move for the resignation of the three officers."

Wood said he would "take three days to think it over," Weisenfluh and Wheelwright said they would have no comment on their requested resignations.

Wheelwright said the commission has taken "an average of only 13.9 days to process an application." "I am proud of that record," said Wood.

Gordon Stevenson, who framed the bylaw says he "still considers it a good bylaw."

Disagreements

The sewerage issue gets curiouser and curiouser.

Former Sewer Commission Chariman Joseph Gwinn last week unilaterally accepted a state grant that would have committed the town to the Metcalf & Eddy sewerage plan. That's the expensive plan the town has twice voted in town meeting not to accept without first exploring an alternative.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson then ruled Gwinn s action accepting the grant unauthorized and therefore void.

Commissioners Charles DeSantis and Edward Guild then voted to depose Gwinn and replace him with DeSantis.

Gwinn then (or at some point in it all) called DeSantis unqualified for the chairmanship. DeSantis and Guild for their part accused Gwinn of "maneuvering behind the backs of voters."

And so it's been going. It would seem town government can't go very many months at a time without one body of statesmen or another slip-sliding away into strident, personally loaded confrontations over some purpose or principle, high or otherwise.

On the sewer question we are talking about more than mere cacophony, we're talking about millions of your dollars. That being the case, and without casting aspersions on any party to the quarrel at hand, we suggest that it's time for all parties thereto to take a walk on the beach, have a double martini — or whatever the individual quarreler uses to regain his sang froid.

Two or three elaboratory suggestions. First, in the weird opera we call democracy, majority rules. Former Chairman Gwinn must recognize that present Chairman DeSantis is for the time being the Chairman Mao Tse-Tung of Cohasset sewers — — —and accord him the proper deference.

By the same token, Chairman DeSantis and his first minister Mr. Guild should recognize that what we have here is a large disagreement, not a federal case. Disagreements over issues are seldom morally consequential. They are disagreements, nothing more.

If Ronald Regan and Tip O'Neill can toast each other with green beer on St. Patrick's Day, then our sewer commissioners can address each other civilly and without getting into each others' motives. In short, gentlemen, keep the debate on sewerage, and out of the sewer.

Finally, a word to the new quintet in town, our board of selectmen. The sewer commission needs selectmen's guidance. As chief executive officers of the town, selectmen ought to call a joint public meeting of both boards and the Board of Health, chaired by new selectman chairman Mary Jane McArthur.

Air the issues, lady and gentlemen, and see if you can't come to some agreement about what to do next. For even an agreement to disagree would be an improvement over what's been going down lately.

Back home safe and sound

By Claire McDonough

"Don't worry," the Dragon told me. "Patrick will be all right. Lots of kids go on extended bike rides."

I shot him a withering glance. "To Maine?"

"Look," he told me, "he'll be keeping to the main roads. What could happen?"

"He could get run over by a tractor trailer," I replied. "Furthermore, the main roads go through woods. A bear could eat him. A moose could trample him to death. Someone from a weird religious sect could kidnap him and force him to spend the rest of his life with a shaved head eating soy bean curd, and drinking yak's milk. When I think of all the years we spent feeding him vitamins, taking him for medical checkups, making sure he had a balanced diet, just so he could wind up on yak's milk."

The Dragon sighed. "You're always so pessimistic. Give the kid credit for a little common sense. He should be back any day now, anyway. You know he's planning to be here for Maureen's wedding."

"Not if he's been trampled by a moose," I snapped. "And why should I give him credit for common sense? He'd rather listen to the Beach Boys than Wayne Newton. And no one with common sense pours bacon grease in his orange juice."

"He was four years old when he did that. Besides, he called us from New Hampshire."

"One call in two weeks," I snarled. "A six hundred mile trip and we get one phone call. Probably that sect doesn't let you make long distance calls even after the rates go down. Or he could be lying in a hospital bed, a victim of amnesia that was induced by a bear bite."

"He might not want to spend the money on a phone call," the Dragon pointed out reasonably. "But if he were hospitalized we would have heard. He always carries identification."

"He also always loses everything he carries," I snapped. "And he could have called collect."

The Dragon started to lose patience.

"He couldn't get through if he tried. You're always on the phone with the State Police from Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts. But have it your own way. He probably developed an intolerance for bean curd and he's in a coma surrounded by hostile aliens."

I looked at him with pity. "Really, Johnny, you're so negative."

Just then Patrick's dog threw himself into a joyous frenzy. Five minutes later the front door opened and Borameer hurled himself at a soiled, bearded individual, knocked him to the floor, held him down with one massive paw, and bestowed slobbering kisses on his face.

We recognized our son behind the Grizzly Adams type beard.

"See," the Dragon exulted, "I was right. He's back and he's safe. And think what he's gained. He's gained personal knowledge and appreciation of New England. He's gained experience that will stand him in good stead in all his future endeavors. He's gained..."

"Never mind what he's gained," I interrupted, still not ready to be mollified. "I'm waiting to find out what he's lost."

Patrick grinned. "I lost 15 pounds."

"Don't put the bike away," I said, rising from my chair. "And please get out the roadmap you used. I'm going to Maine."

Vote for Volungis quote interpreted

Letters

To the Editor:

Last week school committee member Diana Kornet was quoted as using the term "cutters" to describe the supporters of challenger Judy Volungis.

Perhaps it was not meant to be a derogatory remark, but it did sound that way.

I do think more thought should have been given to the respect of a person's right to support any candidate for whatever reason.

One must realize that people in favor of not increasing our school budget during these times are not necessarily for "cutting" programs nor are they against quality education.

I hope our committee members take note of the number of blanks that showed in the school committee vote. This is surely a statement of some sort.

Isn't it time for our school committee to be very positive and encouraging in their statements to all townspeople who show any interest in our schools?

I don't think the "best" can be achieved for our schools unless people feel they can express their feelings without being looked at as being against good education or "cutters."

Jo-Ann Rossi
39 Ledgewood Drive

What do blank votes mean?

To the Editor:

In last week's Mariner school committee member Diana Kornet said that because most of challenger Judy Volungis' support came from "cutters, I regard (the election) as an indication of a support and rededication to education."

School committee incumbents Kornet and John Langmaid were re-elected by 1,400 and 1,341 votes, respectively. Volungis tallied 888 votes. Blanks were 986.

One could accurately conclude from the results that more people voting favored the incumbents than the challenger. Also, nearly a thousand didn't like the choices, were dissatisfied with someone or something, or didn't know the candidates well enough to make a choice.

To deduce that those who voted for Volungis are "cutters," is presumptuous. Particularly since Volungis did not campaign on a platform of 'cutting.' She expressed an overall sense of concern for education; offered some new ideas for solving the many troubles that beset public education; and

New look in Cushing Plaza

The Corner MEAT SHOP MARKET Cohasset, MA

Two hundred shoppers greet Corner Meat opening

Estimating a jam packed crowd of 200 shoppers at 12:30 Tuesday, Cushing Plaza manager Joe Quinn reported a tremendous opening of Corner Meat Market.

The store opened at noon after a special champagne breakfast and a tour of the building, formerly the old Fayva shoe store site.

Rows of fruits, vegetables, meat, soda, a bakery cheese counters, deli, frozen foods, were neatly filled as many customers said they were pleased with the store's layout and design.

The store is 68 feet wide with 50 feet of that being a glass door area which will convert to an open air market in the summertime.

Quinn called Corner Meat one of the flagship stores of Cushing Plaza. Earlier he had said the shop will add a new dimension to the shopping center and will provide a needed service in the area. "They are tops in their business," Quinn Said.

Last week Selectman Rocco Laugelle said, "I've been through the Corner Meat Market and it's a credit to the community. It's good competition for the Stop 'N Shop and we need it. We're glad to see you come aboard."

The store will employ between five and 20 area residents. Store hours are 7 a.m. to 9 p.m., seven days a week.

The Corner Meat Shop was founded in 1977 and has stores located in Assinippi, Marshfield and Hingham. Richardson said the Cohasset-Scituate store will be a full line store specializing in personal service and custom cutting of "high quality" meats. Robertson, Richardson and his wife Erica will be active in managing the new store.

Richardson said he always had it in the back of his mind to open a store in Cohasset and Scituate as he passed the Plaza on his way to the Hingham store. "When Joe called us in September and suggested the Scituate-Cohasset area I thought it was a tremendous opportunity," he said.

The store will feature special sections for produce, bakery, diary, frozen foods and of course the store's calling card, meat and deli.

The store will be constructed with special doors at the front. "It will be designed like a roadside stand," Richardson said.

Richardson said his stores emphasize a personal service "and doing things for the customer" such as special meat cuts and telephone orders. He said the store cooks its own roast beef and bakes its own rolls and bread.

The store will feature a self-service produce and prepared foods section with entrees, sauces and dressings to go with the meats and delis.

Murray's memos

Report from the state house

By State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray

When the Governor unveiled his fiscal 1984 budget recommendations in early March, $151.2 million was set aside for new local aid — money distributed through a number of formulae to fund the various services provided by cities and towns. Distribution formula consider a number of factors including population, number of school age children, per capita income, etc.

In recent years, the local aid issue related to how the state could participate in Proposition 2½ by giving cities and towns at least 50 percent of the amount they would have to cut.

Now, as we enter the third fiscal year under Proposition 2½ only eleven of the state's 351 communities have yet to achieve the 2½ percent property tax levy required. So, the local aid controversy this year has centered on how the $151.2 million new local aid money would be distributed. Would the major share go to those eleven communities, primarily the older cities? Would the administration side with the teachers' unions and "earmark" a bulk of the money for public schools? Or, would the administration agree with the municipal officials who believe they should have discretion on how to spend the money in their communities and not be bound by "earmarking" of monies?

The agreement reached by the Administration with legislators, municipal officials and a number of organizations provides for every city and town to receive an increase in local aid over the last year. Of the $151.2 million total, $145 million is distributed according to the standard formula and the remaining $6.2 million is designated to fully fund regional school district transportation costs. An additional $6.6 million anticipated in receipts from the "Megabucks" lottery game run by the state will be distributed for new public library aid and to reimburse the 21 cities and towns that are assessed by the MBTA but receive no public transit services.

With the exception of one provision, the Governor's local aid package is a good one. That exception is a bill which would allow the eleven communities that still have to decrease their property tax rate to spread the loss over two years by a vote of the town meeting or city council.

This would undermine a major provision of Proposition 2½ which does allow for override by the voters, not the elected officials. Last year, for example, Greenfield and Cambridge voters overrode Proposition 2½. If override is needed for these eleven cities and town in fiscal '84, town officials should have to convince the voters.

"T" CRIME: UPDATE

Increased numbers of MBTA police vs. an improved police communications system is the current controversy in the Special Senate Committee Investigating Crime and Violence on the MBTA. The Committee will file its report in May with recommendations on improving "T" police and train communication systems and for training MBTA starters, inspectors and possibly carmen in law enforcement techniques.

argued in favor of fiscal accountability and fair play.

Kornet, like too many people in town, equates "cutters" with anyone who questions or disagrees with the way the present majority of school committeemen conduct their business.

If someone is not willing to allocate more money for education, they are immediately suspect of educational non-support.

Since money is a scarce commodity these days, Kornet and others would be wise to expand their thinking and be more creative and daring in their approach to education. The product need not suffer from new ways of doing things.

I am a resident who voted for Volungis, but I support and am dedicated to good public education in Cohasset.

I can not speak for the other 887 who voted for Volungis, nor would I be bold enough to do so.

release any copies of minutes, even though the minutes are public records, and should be available under law. She said that "they might contain matters under potential litigation, and I am awaiting a ruling from Town Counsel."

Associate Town Counsel, John Slater, in the absence of Town Counsel Richard Henderson, said Friday, their office had received no written request from Eliopoulos requesting an opinion on the release of the minutes.

April 4, DeFeo found the ponded surface water elevation at the east toe of the landfill, as well as "water on the adjacent parcel under development" to be about 55 feet above mean sea level.

He said this low area was not created during the capping of the old landfill and preparation of the expansion area. He suggested the Board of Health "discuss the possibility of providing an outlet for the trapped water with the owner of the adjacent property. Such a solution would be beneficial to both parties (the town and the developer) in the long run."

Several years ago the landfill was charged with encroachment on undeveloped lands of an abutter, and the town had to purchase the land. Crossen has already started developing his parcel. Louis Bailey was hard at work last week blasting ledge for extension of a road being laid through the property.

Jogging bill dropped . . .

State Sen. Allan McKinnon (D-Weymouth) said any attempts to wear reflective gear as safety precautions is a good thing. "But you can't go much further than that."

"Joggers are usually adults and when they run they are aware of some dangers. We can't restrict all human endeavors. For example, the bill enforcing the ban of jogging in rainy weather is unenforceable, not practical. Those who run take risks. They also realize too they are exercising and living longer than if they don't jog," McKinnon said.

McKinnon said headphones shouldn't impair hearing, especially during running, but the problem with the proposed bill is how to enforce it and how much manpower is needed to enact it.

Murray filed the bill knowing she had some resistance close to home.

"My oldest son jogs on the beach and he told me the bill (to ban jogging during dusk and dawn hours) makes sense. My second son said, 'You've got to be kidding.' My daughter, Lillian, wasn't too happy about it. She doesn't know how it would work.

"I talked to joggers in Cohasset. They told me they worry when a car's coming. The reaction from joggers at the State House was they were not irate but the bill wasn't fair for them. During dusk and dawn, for many of them, it was the only time they could run," Murray said.

Sewer advisory committee needed

The Sewer Commission wants the reactivation of a Sewer Advisory Group under EPA guidelines.

The proposal will establish an advisory group which consists of the following four groups:

1. Private Citizens. No person may be included in this portion of the advisory group who is likely to incur a financial gain or loss greater than that of an average homeowner, taxpayer or consumer as a result of any action likely to be taken by the assisted agency.

2. Representatives of public interest groups. A "public interest group" is an organization which reflects a general civic, social, recreational, environmental or public health perspective in the area and which does not directly reflect the economic interests of its membership.

3. Public officials.

a) Citizens or representatives of organizations with substantial economic interests in the plan or project.

b) Generally, where the activity has a particular geographic focus, the advisory group shall be made up of persons who are residents of that geographic area.

c) In order to meet the advisory group membership requirements of paragraph (c)(1) of this section, the assisted agency shall:

d) Identify public interst groups, economic interests, and public officials who are interested in or affected by the assisted activity.

e) Make active efforts to inform citizens in the affected area, and the persons or groups identified.

This may include such actions as placing notices or announcements in the newspapers or other media, mailing written notices to interested parties, contacting organizations or individuals directly, requesting organizations to notify their members through meetings, newsletters, or other means.

Interested citizens should contact the sewer commission at 383-6630.

This group was established in 1978. The remaining members Ralph Dormitzer, James Froio, Edward Dillon, and Robert Garvey will be called to see if they would like to continue service.

concerning other business and he informed him DeSantis had called the emergency meting.

"I did not think it was necessary to lift up the phone, and give him the same information again," Douglas added.

DeSantis said he had called the meeting after Gwinn had revealed the previous evening that he had signed the $1.1 million grant committing the town of Cohasset contrary to two town meeting votes DeSantis said the meeting was called because of the serious nature of the act, and its legal implications.

DeSantis said to Gwinn: "You should respect the voters of Cohasset more than to try to maneuver around their backs." Gwinn said, "I'm afraid of Superior Court, not of Town Meeting."

Former sewer commissioners Gerard Stanton, and Jan Daggett, who resigned immediately following the passage of Article 4 at the Special Town Meeting last fall, attended.

Stanton said Gwinn was qualified to be Chairman of the Sewer Commission because he was a graduate of MIT and was an engineer.

Daggett said that Gwinn had authority to sign the grant because he "was acting as our agent" pursuant to the vote of the Stanton-Gwinn-Daggett Sewer Commission on August 12, 1982.

However, Ryder said following that vote, the Gwinn-Max Pounder (former commissioner), and DeSantis had voted unanimously to ask for a delay in accepting the grant.

Gwinn referred to a letter from Assistant Attorney General Ann Rogers, as a reason for signing the grant April 11 and "hand deliverying" it April 13. Gwinn had refused to step down as chairman April 12.

Rogers' letter said, "If Cohasset has shown its good faith by accepting the planning advance ($1.1 million grant), the division will consider a request for delay after the extent of the required changes is known.

Town Counsel, Richard Henderson wrote to Ann Rogers on April 14: "At approximately 10:45 p.m. on the evening of Wednesday, April 13, two members of the Cohasset Sewer Commission appeared at my office to inform me that Joseph M. Gwinn had stated a at a meeting that he had signed and delivered on that day to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts the offer for grant assistance in connection with the Metcalf & Eddy facilities plan. If true, the execution of the grant offer was without the knowledge, consent or authority of a majority of the members of the Sewer Commission. Accordingly, the acceptance has no validity."

Commissioner Edward Guild offered three motions intended to restrict Gwinn from undertaking future activities without the knowledge and consent of the other elected Commissioners. DeSantis and Guild voted for these motions, while Gwinn abstained or voted "no."

1. Moved that any powers or authorizations previously granted to or vested in Joseph M. Gwinn by this Board or any of its predecessor boards are hereby revoked in their entirety. This motion shall take immediate effect upon approval by a majority vote of this board.

2. Moved that F. Charles DeSantis be the sole authorized representatiave of this board in communications verbal and written with the firm of Metcalf and Eddy and that the other members of this Board are hereby directed to refrain from any communication verbal or written with said firm, Metcalf and Eddy. This motion shall take immediate effect upon approval by a majority vote of this Board.

3. Moved that contracts or other commitments of any matter whatsoever which shall bind or commit this Board or the Town of Cohasset through this Board must be approved by a majority vote of this Board and must be signed by a majority of this Board prior to taking effect.

Robin Suhrbier, a member of the former Sewer Advisory Group, asked Ryder if a town official could be recalled. Ryder said he did not know of such a provision in Cohasset's Town Bylaws.

Marshfield does have such a provision under its Charter, he noted.

After the meeting DeSantis and Gwinn said they would not support recalling Gwinn. They felt he had a right to sit on the board as a minority member.

Tuesday evening, April 12, the meeting of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission held in the Selectmen's Office was interrupted by a telephone call.

Edward Guild, newly elected Sewer Commissioner was calling for Town Counsel, who was downstairs attending the Selectman's meeting and the hearing on a fireman's grievance.

Guild says Town Counsel Richard Henderson told him he could not come from the Selectman's meeting to the Sewer Commission reorganization, but did render a decision over the telephone.

Guild said at their first meeting after the election, he had nominated Charles DeSantis to be Chairman, and DeSantis had seconded the motion. Guild said Gwinn refused to step down as chairman.

"Gwinn said DeSantis was not qualified to be chairman," said Guild.

"Town Counsel told me, that DeSantis could be voted chairman, since he was elected by the voters to be a sewer commissioner," added Guild, "but Gwinn said he would refuse to accept the opinion until he had received it in writing."

The sewer commissioners then negotiated a contract with Joseph Ward of Ward Associates, where all members agreed to the contract.

"I said DeSantis was not qualified to be chairman, because he had only served two months on this commission," said Gwinn.

The next evening Wednesday, Guild nominated DeSantis, DeSantis seconded the motion again, and accepted the chairmanship.

DeSantis was authorized to send a letter to the Hull Permanent Sewer Commission. It says, "Among the options that we wish to explore is tying in the present sewer collection system with Hull's."

The letter continued, "Our engineer, Ward Engineering Associates of Springfield has done some preliminary estimates on this possibility. It appears that a closer look at this option is warranted. Accordingly, the Town of Cohasset Sewer Commission would be delighted to discuss this issue with your Commission. Ward Engineering is conducting a preliminary study for the entire Town of Cohasset during the next eight weeks. If you are interested in discussion with us, please let us know at your earliest convenience."

Guild said, "Cohasset's exposure could be $1.5 million, not just $500,000." Guild says if the Federal Government refuses to fund the project in Step 3, Cohasset might lose its $500,000 share, and "the Feds may subtract the $1 million from future grants."

Selectman Chairman Mary Jane McArthur as well as selectmen Frank England and John DeBassio attended this meeting. England suggested that the sewer commissioners monitor alleged connections of sump pumps as revealed by village businessman Robert Fessler, and to check infiltration which has been a major problem with the present sewer plant. DeBassio also spoke at length, urging attention to present problems.

Library Information Line . . .

Each week the Paul Pratt Library of Cohasset, the Ventress Memorial Library of Marshfield and the Scituate Public Library present a selection of questions and responses handled by the library's Reference Departments. This week's column is written by Bruce Brigell, Reference Librarian at the Ventress Library.

Q. Is there a book "Apocalypse Now" upon which the 1979 movie of this title was based?

A. Not really. Magill's Survey of Cinema informs us that the film "Apocalypse Now," which starred Martin Sheen and Marlon Brando, was "suggested" by the novella "Heart of Darkness" by Joseph Conrad. The film's screenplay was written by John Milius and the film's Director Francis Ford Coppola. The basic themes of war and inhumanity in the jungle and the search for a renegade military leader are similar in both Coppola's film and Conrad's novella, however the locale and era are quite different. Conrad's "Heart of Darkness" was written in 1902 and is set in the jungles of the Belgian Congo, whereas the film "Apocalypse Now" is set in the jungles of Vietnam and Cambodia during the later years of the Vietnam War.

Q. Is there an organization for those interested in making and collecting miniature dollhouse furnishings?

A. The Encyclopedia of Associations shows the National Association of Miniature Enthusiasts (NAME) is the organization most directly dealing with the collection and production of dollhouse miniatures. Although NAME is located in California, there are 13 regional groups and over 400 local chapters throughout the U.S. You can contact NAME at P.O. Box 2621, Anaheim, CA 92804.

Q. Was John Kennedy the first President to institute program on physical fitness for the nation?

A. Although President Kennedy is most commonly associated with the establishment of a national physical fitness program, his Presidents Council On Physical Fitness and Sports, established in 1963, was not the first of its kind. Kennedy's Council was actually a revitalization of the Presidents Council on Youth Fitness which was established in 1956, during the height of the cold war, by President Eisenhower.

Q. When was Daylight Savings Time first instituted in the U.S. and why was it started?

A. A nationwide system of Daylight Savings was suggested by Benjamin Franklin as a way to conserve candles; however, it was not until 1917, when the U.S. entered World War I that Congress enacted a system to conserve the countries resources by having the sun more in the evenings with a later sunrise. Daylight Savings Time (DST) was repealed in 1919 due to the objections of the nation's farmers. From 1919 to 1942 DST was employed in scattered municipalities and in a few states by local legislation. In 1942, when the U.S. became involved in the Second World War, Congress enacted a year round version of DST which lasted until October, 1945, when it was repealed. Interest in DST remained high after the war with some 36 states employing some period of DST by the mid 1960's. In 1966 Congress passed the Uniform Time Act which instituted a nationwide system of DST from the last Sunday in April to the last Sunday in October. This system has remained intact, except for an experiment in extending DST a couple of months longer during the energy crisis of 1973-74. This extended DST was repealed because of the danger to children of waiting for school buses in the dark early morning hours of March and November. DST is employed primarily to conserve resources and extend summer recreational hours, not to help the farmer as is commonly believed.

Q. Is there a standard size for a basketball backboard?

A. Yes, the Sports Encyclopedia lists the following dimensions for a regulation basketball backboard: A rectangular backboard should measure four feet vertically by six feet horizontally. A fan shaped backboard must be 35 inches high with a 54 inch width and a 29 inch radius.

Q. Is the soundtrack from the movie "The Deer Hunter" still available on cassette tape?

A. Yes, a recent edition of the Schwann Catalog shows it available from Capital, cassette No. 4X00-11940. If it is not in stock at local record stores they usually will order it for you.

Angler's corner...

By Greg Derr

Water levels two to three feet above normal have delayed stocking of some areas with trout. But despite the lack of trout fishing, spring fishing has been the best in years, thanks to a mild winter and relatively warm water temperatures.

Large and smallmouth bass fishing has been productive when anglers use fishing swimming lures. Surface popper or plug will work occasionally. White perch have been taken at the falls of the Indian Head River, with most being caught along the bottom on earth worms. Perch are an overlooked gamefish and taste delicious. Herring are showing up in great numbers at areas near the shore and are moving inland.

Sunfish, although not fancy to the palate of most anglers, are fun to catch and release; fathers looking to turn their kids on to fishing should start with sunfish because nothing turns a kid on to fishing more than catching fish.

The Green Harbor Tuna Club will hold its monthly meeting Sunday, April 24 at 3 in the Dockside Club at Green Harbor Marina. The meeting will be devoted to fishing tackle of all types (not just tuna) and fishing techniques. Anyone wishing to join the club is welcome; the club is for all anglers, not just tuna fisherman. Annual club activities include tournaments for cod, striped bass, bluefish and, of course, giant tuna.

This year's Green Harbor Tuna Club codfish tourney will be sponsored by Roger Jarvis of Huntress Tackle Shop. The tournament will be held May 21; for further information on the rules, see Roger at Huntress Tackle which is located at Green Harbor Marina.

Adams Tackle Shop will sponsor a Coho salmon fishing clinic Sunday, May 22 at the Indian Head dam on the North River (Elm St., Pembroke). The clinic will run from 11 to 5, rain or shine. Experts from the state Division of Marine Fisheries will be on hand as well as tackle manufacturers. There will be a fishing derby for kids 12 and under with tackle as prizes.

Casting experts will instruct on fly-casting and spin fishing. Salmon Unlimited will be there to talk on other various species of salmon.

Any club or organization that has fishing news to share with fellow anglers should sent it to: Angler's Corner, Mariner Newspapers, Box 682, Marshfield, Mass. 02050.

Girls varsity tennis team undefeated

The CHS Girls Varsity Tennis Team stands 4-0 two weeks into the spring season. The Skippers are the only undefeated team in the South Shore League.

The team pulled out a tight 3-2 match over Duxbury last week.

The first and second doubles teams of Diane and Elaine Mullen and Nancy Walls and Ingrid Anderson were the key winners for Cohasset.

The Mullens pulled out with a 6-4, 4-6, and 6-4 sets and while Walls and Anderson played an even 6-2, 6-3 match.

Third singles player Krisste Ralff came out on top with a 6-2, 6-1 win.

The second doubles team of Nancy Walls, a junior, and Ingrid Anderson, A sophomore, are a key ingredient to this years squad. Standing undefeated, they pulled out of a second set tiebreaker (6-4, 7-6, 7-5) in their season opener at Hanover to help in a 4-1 victory.

Second singles player Joy Pratt also contributed to the win with a 6-0, 6-1 victory match along with third singles player Krisste Ralff (6-2, 6-1) and the first doubles team of Diane and Elaine Mullen (6-1, 6-2).

In other recent tennis action the Skippers defeated the Hull Pirates and the Middleboro Sachems 5-0.

Cohasset's next home match will be next Wednesday vs. Norwell at 3:15.

Remembering the late Nate Hurwitz

Here is a reprint of an article about Cohasset's Nate Hurwitz which was published in "The Charlestown Patriot" and "Somerville Chronicle's" Townie Sports Line.

Nate, as he was known and still recalled, served as a member of the Cohasset Board of Health for 27 years, was head of the Cohasset Community Center and served as selectman for two terms.

He also served as state representative for 12 years, representing Cohasset, Hingham, Hull and Norwell. His daughter is Mary Jeanette (Hurwitz) Murray.

The article, published Feb. 17, is titled "Grandfather of Amateur Basketball."

Question: What's the oldest basketball competition in the United States, decades older than either the NBA or the NCAA?

Answer: The Nate Hurwitz Memorial Basketball Tournament, played every spring in Charlestown since 1923.

Over 75,000 boys between the ages of 12 and 19 have competed in this tournament during the last 60 years, many of whom have gone on to play college or professional basketball. The tournament alumni list includes former Detroit Piston Terry Driscoll, former Boston Celtic Kevin Stacom, and former Holy Cross standout Ronnie Perry.

The tournament was begun 60 years ago for the purpose of providing regional competition for neighborhood teams and was played after the close of the regular season. It was not started as a championship in any sense, and even now carries no official title.

By 1930, the Boston Sunday Globe acknowledged that the Hurwitz tournament "had done much toward raising the standards of play among youths by giving them the opportunity to compete with teams of their own size and weight under ideal conditions." Later, Walter Brown, former owner of the Boston Garden and the Boston Celtics Basketball Team, credited Hurwitz with "maintaining regional interest in basketball by encouraging widespread participation among boys."

Now, as the tournament completes its sixth decade of play, its involvement with youth continues. Ninety-six teams will participate this year in the four age divisions of the historic Nate Hurwitz Memorial Basketball Tournament.

Teams will enter this year's tourney from dozens of cities and towns in Eastern Massachusetts, from Beverly to Framingham to Scituate. In past years the tournament had teams representing seven states. Metropolitan Boston will be thoroughly represented by teams in all four divisions. For a nominal entry fee, teams enter the competition which lasts from Friday, March 18 until Saturday, April 9.

The tournament will be played under AAU rules and the games will be supervised by certified referees. In fact, many of the standard rules of organized basketball competition have evolved from rules introduced by tournaments like this one. The double-dribble rule is one of these.

When the organizers of the Tech Tourney, the oldest high school basketball competition in the country, began their tournament, they went to Nate Hurwitz for advice on how to manage such a large tournament. His counsel helped make the Tech a staple in the basketball community.

Hurwitz, who lived from 1894 to 1966, served for 25 years as Athletic Director for the Boys' Clubs of Boston, which is now the Boys & Girls Clubs of Boston. Previously he was a member of the Boston Whirlwinds, a professional basketball club that played throughout New England. He was also a soldier and a professional boxing manager.

His interest in sports was matched by his interest in youth. He saw athletics as a meaningful outlet for urban boys, and he often convinced policemen to let him have a crack at delinquents before the court could. The Boston Globe referred to him several times as "The father of 10,000 kids" because of the positive relationships he had with so many of the youth of Boston.

He left the Charlestown Clubhouse in 1945 when he was elected state representative from Cohasset. His daughter, Mary Jeannette Hurwitz Murray, now serves in the same seat in the House of Representatives, making them the only father/daughter combination to serve a constituency in Massachusetts.

John Brennan, current Athletic Director for the Charlestown Clubhouse, still hears mention of Hurwitz at the tournament. "I've been associated with the Nate Hurwitz Memorial Tournament as a player, a staff member, and now as the Director, and every year I have men who played in competition years ago approach me with anecdotes of Nate. They still come to see the kids play at the same gym that they played in 30 or 40 years ago."

At the Rec Department...

EASTER EGG HUNT

Over 300 Cohasset youngsters between the ages of 3 and 11 participated in the Recreation Department Annual Easter Egg Hunt April 2.

The program was made possible because of donations from the Cohasset Rotary Club and the American Legion — George Mealy Post #118. Many thanks to the members of both organizations for making this program possible.

SCUBA LESSONS

The Recreation Dept. is accepting phone registrations for a scuba diving class. The program will be held Wednesday evenings from 6:45 —10 p.m.; class size will be limited to 10.

The cost for the program includes all teaching materials, pool time, equipment rental, etc. An additional fee will be charged at a later date for four ocean dives.

The program will lead to certification from the Professional Association of Diving Instructors (PADI). Jeanna Sciarappa will instruct the course. She holds a B.S. degree in recreation and leisure studies from Northeastern University and is a graduate of Underwater Careers International, Hollywood, Fla., where she received her diving instructor certification.

If interested in this program, call the recreation office at 383-6791. The program will begin Wednesday, April 20. Participants will provide their own fins, mask and snorkle for health reasons.

TRIPS

The Rec. Dept. is now accepting registrations for three Trips for residents, non-residents who may be interested.

Trip I: "Cruise to Nowhere" with a stop in Nova Scotia—2 days, 1 night. July 16 and 17. $139 per person, double occupancy. M-S Scotia Prince.

Trip II: "Weekend Fantasy Cruise" plus day of New York City shopping and Radio City Music Hall Show—2 days, 1 night. August 12 and 13. $189 per person, double occupancy. S.S. Britanis.

For those interested in any of the above trips; please call the Recreation Department office at 383-6791 for further details and information. All trips are chaperoned by a professional Tour Director. All trips are subject to 15 percent tax and service per person.

DOG TRAINING

The Cohasset Recreation Department is now accepting telephone registrations for two Dog Obedience training programs scheduled to begin on Wednesday evening, May 4. The fee will be $15 per dog for the eight week session and the sessions will be held from 6 to 7 p.m.

The purpose of the first class will be to teach novice and pet owners basic obedience and responsible pet ownership. Subjects to be covered will include proper use of voice, corrections, stay commands, getting the dog to come, heel, etc. Helpful hints on dog ownership and responsibility will also be included.

To register, please call the Recreation Department Office at 383-6791. Class size will be limited and enrolled on a first call first registered basis. Non-residents will be enrolled as space allows.

Obituaries

Margaret Knapp

Margaret V. (Kelleher) Knapp, 85, of Cohasset, formerly of Marshfield, died Sunday at Memorial Hospital, Nashua, NH, after a long illness.

Born in Cambridge, she attended Cambridge schools. She moved to Cohasset 15 years ago from Marshfield.

She was the wife of the late Elwin D. Knapp, founder of Knapp Shoes of Brockton. They sold the company approximately 30 years ago.

She was involved with various charitable organizations and worked with parolees of the Framingham Women's Reformatory.

She leaves four daughters, Louis K. Schwartz of Devon, Pa., Elaine K. White of Scituate, Arlette McCarthy of Duxbury and Margaret D. Galvin of Auburn, N.H.; a brother, Leo Kelleher of Philadelphia; 24 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Wednesday in St. Frances Xavier Cabrini, Scituate. Burial will be in St. Joseph's Cemetery, West Roxbury.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to St. Jude Hospital, Memphis, Tenn. 38111.

Nathan Souther

Nathan Souther, 74, a retired iceman, died Friday at the Woodbridge Nursing Home in Brockton after a long illness.

Born in Cohasset, he attended Cohasset schools and the Norfolk Agricultural School in Walpole.

By Joan Pinkham

One of the lesser delights of spring is housecleaning. In true April fashion, the sun plays peek-a-boo, teasing us with a few warm rays of sun to come outdoors, while filtering through windows and curtains that demand our grudging attention. In our house, at least, one thing leads to another and soon, paint needs freshening, pictures and mirrors look dingy and before you know it, you're trapped into the annual spring chores. When all is done and you look like something out of House Beautiful, with nary a magazine, pillow or rug askew, why not celebrate with a party where you could start off with Donna Mahaney's

ROLL-UPS

20 slices bread (thin)
3 oz. bleu cheese
8 oz. cream cheese
1 egg
20 spears asparagus
1/2 c. melted butter or oleo

Trim crusts and flatten bread with rolling pin. Blend cheese with egg. Spread on bread. Place an asparagus spear on each slice and roll up, using toothpick to secure. Dip in butter, coat thoroughly. Slice into three equal sections. Bake at 400 degrees for 15 min.

Now's the time to grit one's teeth and take a ruthless inventory of the contents, utensils and appliances that clutter up our lives. Out with clothes you haven't worn the past year, Mother's Day cards that junior sent in the first grade and magazines you've been meaning to read. Be utterly cold-blooded when it comes to the kitchen, forgetting what you paid for certain items, or who gave them to you. Whatever is inefficient, ugly, or ersatz should go, but whatever you do, don't throw out any good recipes that you could instead share with our readers as did Olga Phelan, who sent in this recipe for a tasty, moist

EASY-DO BANANA BREAD

1 pkg. yellow cake mix
1/2 c. evaporated milk
2 slightly beaten eggs
2 tsp. vanilla
1/4 c. cooking oil
1 c. mashed bananas
1/2 tsp. soda
1/2 c. shredded coconut, or chopped nuts
3/4 c. fine graham cracker crumbs

Combine first seven ingredients. Beat well on low speed until blended. Do not overbeat; mix only until smooth. Quickly mix in coconut or nuts and graham cracker crumbs. Pour into well-greased and floured loaf pan. Bake in 350 degree oven one hour or until loaf tests done. Serve plain, or sift confectioners' sugar over top. Avoid over browning top by covering with foil final 20 min. if needed.

It's an easy matter to dispose of unloved or unwanted objects — just have a garage sale. People will arrive in droves and with a little luck will be eager to acquire your cast-offs to clutter up their home instead. With the money you make, treat yourself to a new casserole dish in which to serve Betty Mancini's

MOCK LOBSTER CASSEROLE

2 pounds of fillet of haddock
1 can frozen cream of shrimp soup, thawed
1 T sherry or lemon juice, optional
1/4 c. melted butter or margarine
1/2 T minced onion
1/2 tsp. crushed garlic, or 1/8 tsp. garlic powder
1/2 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
30 Ritz crackers, crushed

Place fish in casserole dish. Sprinkle with salt. Pour cream of shrimp soup over fish. Add sherry or lemon, if desired. Bake uncovered for 20 min. at 375 degrees. While baking, stir onion, garlic and Worcestershire into melted butter and blend with cracker crumbs. Sprinkle crumb mixture over fish and bake 10 min. more, or until brown. Serves six. Serve with lemon wedges to squeeze over fish. NOTE: Betty suggests splurging with a small can of lobster, drained and added with the soup.

Just what's wrong with my emissions?

By Lois Martin

To reach this age only to find my emissions being challenged gives me pause.

In the 30 years of my commendable use of roadways no one's ever said anything to me about my emissions. I've absorbed a few comments about my carburetor and my tie rods over the years. But my exhaust has been sacrosanct. Nobody's business.

I'm not one to thwart higher rulings. But I've had enough trouble getting through the non computer inspections. I may need to take a bus for the rest of my life.

Last fall when I drove into the inspection station the man wryly said I wasn't in the Indy 500. I let that pass, suspecting his breakfast rolled oats had been mushy. I paid strict attention, got my lights on when told to, put my little foot on the brake at his mandate, blew my horn on cue. And passed. No hard feelings.

Now they're hauling in men in long white doctor's jackets to inspect my Monza Minima They've bought The Bear to analyze my exhaust. Now that title tells us the temperament of that machine. It's looking for trouble. The Bear comes new in a foul mood.

Then there's the Hamilton. If we'd ever met Mr. Hamilton we'd have an idea what he's looking for and perhaps be in a position to administer preventive medicine, Windex on the inside instruments or something. My panel board has a lot of empty circles in it where digital clocks or special amenities could have been installed. But with the minimum model you get four options. I chose the tires.

I'm wondering. Before my computer inspection turn comes, maybe I should invest in one of those horizontal dollies, mechanic's creeper-things. People going by Forest Street would see my high heels protruding from underneath my car as I hammer away at what's loose and check out my exhaust before anyone else gets to see it.

One man said these critical tests will "get the heaps off the road." I take that personally. I've tried to take good care of myself and people in that field should limit their speculations to cars. Of course, we in Massachusetts use highways for therapy. You got something you want to get out of your system, you drive. No state on earth has recorded a higher percentage of rude use of fingers than we have, nor use of articulate invectives.

I recently irritated a woman in Brockton. I stopped in a lane where she didn't want me to be. I sensed that immediately. And it wasn't because I was clairvoyant. It was because I read her lips and her right hand in my rear view mirror.

Maybe that's one of the reasons for this thorough computer scan of my Monza, a delicate way to eliminate my use of roads.

They say if you don't pass inspection it could be your plugs or your malfunctioning choke. And they speak of pre-calibrating my exhaust. My inspection time is July. I'm a '7.' The inspection will take quite a while, especially if I idle too fast, from what I read, and if that has to be adjusted.

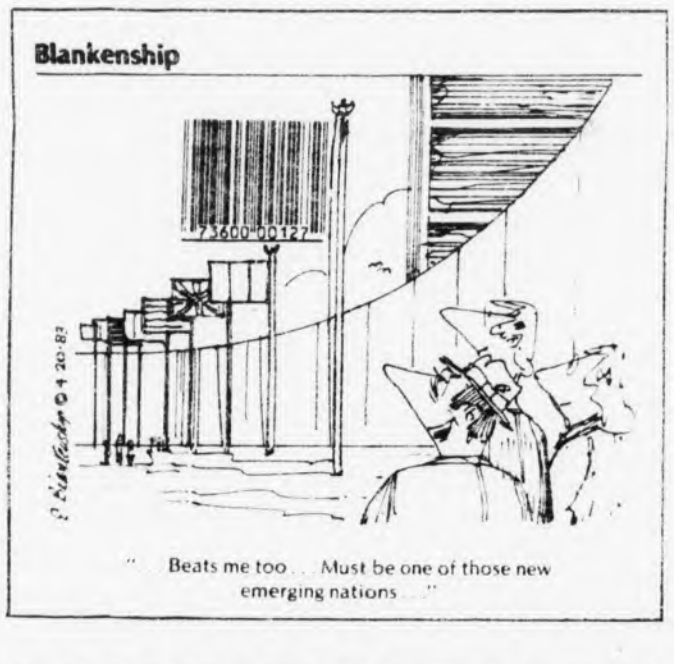
This program will be a major boost to psychiatrict counselors. They'll treat people now because of emission phobias.

Not to worry. I've got three months in which to work under my car. If I can get that exhaust system out of there by then I'll have no problem with my emissions.

Cancer Control Month

Gov. Michael Dukakis has proclaimed April Cancer Control Month, and urged all citizens of the Commonwealth to support the American Cancer Society's Cancer Crusade this month.

"This year, 24,000 Massachusetts residents will learn that they have cancer," Gov. Dukakis said. "Thanks to advances in research and treatment, however, three out of eight of these patients will be cured of their cancers. We could greatly increase these statistics if more people were aware of cancer's warning signs, and sought early medical treatment for their cancers."



On Tuesday, April 26, 110,000 American Cancer Society volunteers in Massachusetts will distribute potentially life-saving coupons to their neighbors as part of the Society's 1983 educational and fundraising residential Crusade.

News from Pack 38 . . .

By Linda Farray

Den I: Billy Baird and his family have been enjoying the Florida sun. Welcome home.

In the meantime Lucy Marsac had had the Cubs continue to predict the weather. The cubs have set up a weather station with a weather vane, rain gauge, and barometer. They have been recording temperatures. (With all the rain there has been I bet their rain gauge will be overflowing.)

Congratulations to Mike Cisneros, First place winner of Pinewood Derby for nine year-olds and Linc Marsac, third place winner of Pinewood Derby nine year-olds.

Billy Baird received the Gold Arrow Badge.

Den II: The Cubs went to the Boston Science Museum to see the Planetarium. While at the museum the boys saw the bells from the Old North Church, which were being stored there.

The Cubs have been pointing out the signs of spring arriving. (No not the Red Sox!) The Cubs divided into teams and recorded the signs of spring while on a nature walk.

Matt's dad, John Norris, showed the boys the progress of building a house in different phases. (There may be some future contractors among Den II.)

The Cubs also visited the police station but were in a hurry to leave once they saw the small jail quarters. They didn't want to spend time there! (I wouldn't want to be in jail either.)

The boys have also practiced life saving techniques as rope tossing when needed to rescue someone.

Matt Norris received The Bear Badge.

Den III: Congratulations for two winners for the Pinewood Derby; MacCampbell for Second Place for the eight year-olds and Doug Moe, third place for the 10 year-olds.

Den IV: Paul Ford and Peter Smaith completed a mile bike ride.

The Cubs learned how to row a boat with the help of Mr. Ford. Each cub had a turn. They rowed to an island and hiked around.

Congratulations to Phil Pratt for Second Place in the nine year-olds.

Den V: The Cubs went on a tour of Quincy's Proctor and Gamble thanks to Danny's dad. The boys saw how soap and detergent are made. They had a fun time and even received a sample.

They have been learning secret codes and have been sending secret messages.

Hopefully, in the near future the Cubs will be going on a field trip to Pembroke to see the herring run.

Congratulations to Danny Demichael, First place winner in Pinewood Derby for eight year-olds.

Danny DeMichael received The Wolf Badge.

Den VI: Karen Spencer took the boys horseback riding in Hingham.

The Cubs have been planting seedlings such as basil. They may grow a nice herb garden.

Den VII: The boys have been hard workers.

Mac Campbell, Jeff Stone, Brendon McCarthy, Danny Curtin, Jason Curtin, Ian Fitzpatrick and Chip Kennedy all received their Wolf Badges.

Den VIII: All the Cubs enjoyed the Pinewood Derby. They are already planning the design of their future cars for next year's race.

Den VIII: All the Cubs enjoyed the Pinewood Derby. They are already planning the design of their future cars for next year's race.

Congratulations for Pinewood Derby Winner Patrick Suhrbier for third place.

Robert Hughes, Jason Legere, Bill Murphy, Patrick Suhrbier and Brian Conant all received their Wolf Badges.

Robert Hughes, Bill Murphy, Patrick Suhrbier and Brian Conant all received their Gold and Silver Arrow Badges.

Jason Legere received his Gold Arrow Badge.

Webelos I: Richard, David and Jimmy attended the District Webelos Campree camping out one night at Wompatuck Park. (Thank goodness it didn't rain) Thanks to Richard McLaughlin's father Chuck, for making the camp out possible for the boys.

Congratulations to Pinewood Derby Winner Richard McLaughlin for Second Place in the 10 year-olds.

Webelos II: Joe Gallagher has retired for the time being as the race car designer for his den's Derby. The boys wanted to thank him for all his help.

Sean Gallagher, John Reed, Donald Caffrey and Sean McCarthy all received their Sportsman and Craftsman Badges.

Webelo III: The Webelos are sorry to see the Anderson Family move. Maybe Ross will write us and tell us about his new home.

Congratulations for Pinewood Derby winner Greg Lennon for First Place in 10 year-olds.

Peter Curtin and Greg Lennon received their Citizenship Badges.

Thanks for all the help for our Pinewood Derby's success, especially to Dick Avery, Bill Baird, Tim Marsac, Pat McCarthy and Mr. Moe.

The Cubs will be marching in uniform in the Memorial Day parade. The meeting will be announced.

Today's air fares are subject to frequent dramatic changes. It is not unusual for a bargain price to appear that was unthinkable only two years ago. There are, however, two points to keep in mind when purchasing a ticket through the airlines or your travel agent. If you find that an air fare has been reduced after you have paid a higher price for your ticket, but before you fly, you are usually entitled to a refund of the difference. Secondly, with a confirmed reservation and ticket purchase, you are usually protected against any price increase before you fly. Your travel agent is knowledgeable in all such matters.

You're in the drivers seat with travel arrangements made by COLPITTS TRAVEL CENTER*. We are working for you. Securing the travel arrangements and accommodations at the best price available is our goal. We are working to keep your vacation expenses within the framework of your budget. MEDI MART DRUGSTORES...ONE OF THE STOP & SHOP COMPANIES

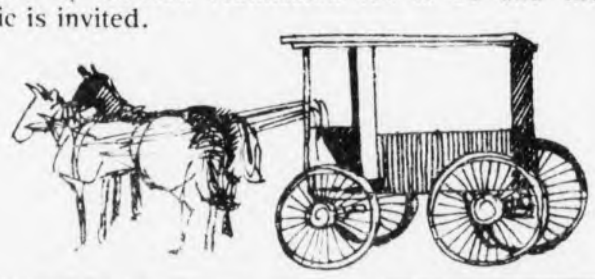
Spring session now underway at CCC

Spring Session has begun at the Cohasset Community Center. Along with a full schedule of courses, for youths and adults, many workshops are planned. Next week the Pinata workshop begins. Children eight years-old and up will create a colorful pinata.

Papier-mache, painting and crepe paper collage all combine for a unique craft project. The workshops meet three Monday afternoons, April 25, May 2 and 9 from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m.

For cooks and connoisseurs we have our Hor-d'oeuvre workshop which also begins Monday. Attend this two session workshop given by expert Joanne Brown. You will create a variety of appetizing finger foods. Curried olive appetizers, spinach balls and phyllo pasteries to name a few. Monday, April 25 and May 2 from 7 to 9 p.m.



Anna Abbruzze has another taste tempting workshop planned for Tuesday, April 26. Entitled "Gathering and Preparing Mussels" this workshop meets at the Center at 4:30 p.m. (ends at 7:30 p.m.) to gather the mussels, then back to the center to prepare two hors-d'oeuvres and a main dish.

Dr. Michael Equi and Linda Farrag are again giving their life saving course in CPR (Cardio-pulmonary Resuscitation). Emergency resuscitative techniques for cardiac and/or respiratory arrest are covered in this course. Class size is limited and will be held Wed. and Thurs. April 27 and 28 from 7 to 11 p.m.

Call the Center, 3 N. Main St., for details and enrollment. Hours are daily 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., 383-0088.

The Clergy speaks . . . Town meeting and sewer

By Rev. Edward T. Atkinson, Minister

Because the Hebrew people believed that their God, Yahweh, was revealing himself to them in their history they kept, first verbally, and later in writing, accounts of the various events which happened to them. These accounts make up the books we revere as the Old Testament, and the insights they offer have been an inspiration not only to the people of Israel, but to the peoples of many other nations as well.

In Cohasset we have our own Bible of sorts, a history of the people in the community as recorded in two volumes, the first authored by the Rev. E. Victor Bigelow and the second by Burtram J. Pratt. The following passage taken from Burt Pratt's volume, pages 98-100, seems particularly instructive in light of recent debate at our Annual Town Meeting:

"The problem of this nuisance stream, (James Brook) which flows nearly the length of the town, was brought up at the town meeting of 1906, at which time a committee consisting of Dr. Oliver H. Howe, Dr. Herbert E. Fernald and Thomas Mannix, was appointed to consider the matter of preventing the pollution of James River, so called, by sewage and other causes.

Examining the channel and tributary drainage of the brook from Smith Place to the Harbor, the committee found that the stream, which drains a considerable swampy tract extending along the railroad between the Black Rock (King Street) and Cohasset stations, had a fair amount of water after heavy rains, and in spring overflowed its banks. The channel, it was discovered, had only a slight fall between Pleasant Street and the Harbor, making the current always sluggish; in dry summers it was reduced to a mere rivulet, and various obstructions caused portions of the channel to remain stagnant.

Furthermore, in following the course of the brook, the committee found house drainage from thirty homes flowing into it. The committee found a very unsatisfactory state of affairs, and called in the State Board of Health which sent an engineer who, after a casual examination, suggested the construction of a sewerage system. With the advice and consent of the Selectmen and Board of Health, Leonard Metcalf, a Boston engineer, was engaged and he conducted an extensive survey of the problem.

The system laid out on paper by Mr. Metcalf, would have provided sewers for the portion of Pleasant Street below the hill; Main Street from the north end of the Common to Spring Street; Highland Avenue around the Common; all of Elm and Brook Streets; Depot Court; and Border Street to beyond Tower Brothers and Company's store (now Hugo's); Summer Street, from the Harbor to Snow Place (Black Horse Lane).

But the estimated cost of $34,900 appeared high, and the committee sought other methods by which the nuisance could be abated. Eventually, it recommended putting the burden on the homeowners. In an exhaustive report, which ran the gamut from sympathy for the burdened homeowner to the threat of legal action, it described in detail a type of sand filter bed, which could be constructed at a small cost, on each of the offending properties. It was the committee's opinion that: "prompt and vigorous action on the part of the Board of Health, with the full use of the authority vested in them by the law, will suffice to abate the nuisance and to postpone the question of a system of sewerage for quite a number of years — at least ten and perhaps twenty."

What was it that the preacher said in Ecclesiastes? Oh yes, "The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun."

Here endeth the morning reading.

Girl Scouts sell 5,396 boxes of cookies

Patriots' Trail Girl Scout Council's local service Unit Cookie Chairman Debbie Hasse reported that Cohasset Scouts sold a total of 5,396 boxes of cookies during the 1983 Girl Scout Cookie Sale.

The total was pleasing to the 114 Scouts who participated in the sale, who know that the total translates into more and better programs provided by the Council, as well as expanded opportunities for the individual troops to carry out plans for special events, camping, traveling, and service projects.

Each troop receives a profit of 30 cents per box, and this profit helps to fund troop activities. In addition, each individual Girl Scout receives 10 cents camp credit for every box she sells, which she can apply to summer camp fee or the cost of a Wider opportunity (a program of travel and education for older girls).

Record sales were made by Brownie troop #4615 (led by Mary Anne Hansen) who sold 1080 boxes. Twenty girls have earned a Cookie Patch by selling 60 boxes or more. They are: Brownies — Kara Protulis, Priscilla Goff, Ann Margaret Grew, Bridget Leung, Lara Martin, Mindy Cheel, Meredith Hansen, Nicole Haefner, Erin McAllister, Tina Rousseau, Courtney Schultz, Rebecca Golden, Jennifer Pool and Shona Hislop, Juniors — Nicole Greco, Kristen Martin, Jennifer Martin, Amy Hobbs, Allyson James and Senior — Jean Bailey.

There were 10 girls who sold 100 or more boxes, earning a cookie T-shirt. They are: Brownies — Emily Spencer, Katie O'Connor, Trisha Hunt, Jessica MacDonald, Jennifer Knowles and Tanya Petersonn Juniors — Maureen Long, Pamela Haase, Kathleen Long, and Cadette — Kathy Haase. Three girls sold 150 or more boxes of cookies. There are Brownies Kristin Grassey, Anne Lindgren and Meka-Mari Laugelle. Meka-Mari was top seller in town with 237 boxes sold.

Buying Girl Scout cookies supports the Girl Scout organization and individual girls and troops in this area. The Cohasset Girl Scouts appreciate the support of local residents who helped to make the 1983 Cookie Sale a success.

South Shore Art Center scholarship explained

The South Shore Art Center was named by the trustees of the Fred. E. Bergfors Fund to administer a Bergfors Fund Art Scholarship in the amount of $1,000 to a talented high school senior living on the South Shore.

"This is indeed an honor for the art center to be selected by the trustees to administer this scholarship to a worthy high school student," Margaret Dillon, director of the Center, said in announcing the Center's involvement in this program.

The Bergfors scholarship will be awarded by the Art Center in conjunction with its other awards, a $600 Marion Huse Scholarship and a $200 MacIvor Reddie award. Selection of scholarship recipients is based on a student's application and portfolio which must be submitted to the Center Saturday, April 30 between noon and 1 p.m. Portfolios may be picked up Wednesday, May 4, between noon and 4 p.m.

The Bergfors Fund was developed in the name of lifelong Quincy resident, businessman and civic leader Fred E. Bergfors, founder of the Quincy Oil Co. The roots of this company go back to 1916 when Bergors, who at the time was delivering kerosene for the ABC Oil Co., decided to purchase the company and subsequently changed its name to Quincy Oil. He continued to direct the business until his retirement in 1976.

He was the founder of the Quincy Rotary and the Quincy Chamber of Commerce. He helped organize the Independent Oil Men's Assn. and served as its president for a term.

The fund was established by Bergfors with earnings from the oil company and is used to provide financial assistance to non-profit institutions and to individuals in South Shore communities to advance and promote science, medicine, music, art, literature and human welfare. Since his death, the fund has been administered by Mrs. Fred Bergfors, Sr., Fred E. Bergfors, Jr., Elaine Prang and Constance Bergfors Rice.

The selection of the recipient of the Bergfors scholarship will be based on portfolios judged by Rice, who is a painter and sculptor.

Portfolio requirements for all three South Shore Art Center scholarships are eight examples of the student's best work including a self-portrait or portrait drawing done from life, a still-life drawing from actual objects and a composition drawing or painting using representational subject matter in any medium. Quality slides or pictures of 3-D work will be accepted. Slides or photographs or work must be marked with applicant's name, title of work, medium, actual size and arrows to indicate top of slide or photograph. Work should not exceed 18" by 24" and must be matted but not framed.

All applicants will be informed of the jury's decisions by the Art Center and the winners of the scholarships will be announced at graduation exercises. The scholarships will be paid directly to the winner's school at the beginning of the second semester and will be applied to tuition costs.

Dillon encourages graduating seniors to submit their portfolios and asks high school teachers to make their students aware of these opportunities. Selections by a jury of artist-educators will be made on the basis of promise and ability as exhibited in the portfolios.

Questions regarding the Bergfors scholarship may be addressed to Constance Rice, P.O. Box 150, Quincy, MA 02269.

For information regarding the other South Shore Art Center scholarships, applicants may call the Center at 383-9548.

Exterior Painting

Blistering and peeling is by far the most common type of house paint failure. Flaking and cracking occur when the wood itself swells and shrinks due to wetting and drying out. Unless a paint coating has both good adhesion and some elastic quality, it will crack under the strain; and thus let more water in from outside — which magnifies the problem.

Please feel free to call us about any paint problems you may have with your house.

GRANDMA'S ATTIC

"A Country Shop"
The greatest collection of country handcrafts and collectibles under one roof!

Grandma's comment of the week:
When you are shopping for shower and wedding gifts this season, consider giving an antique. This unique kind of gift will thrill a "country-minded" bride, become a family treasure, and always hold its value. We have a choice selection of affordable country antiques for all your special gifts.

Grandma's thought for the week:
When a person says he has a clean conscience, it often means he has a bad memory.

The drug war goes on for Luci Forti

By Judy Foley

Luci Forti, executive director of Concerned Citizens for Drug Prevention, headquartered in Hanover, has some grim statistics about drug and alcohol use.

According to her statistics, the United States has the highest level of drug abuse than any other nation on earth.

— The average age of initiation in the use of marijuana is a startling 11.6 years.

— About 60,000 youths between the ages of 10 and 19 enter therapy each year for marijuana and alcohol related complications.

— According to a National Institute of Drug Abuse study, 66 percent of all high school seniors admit to the illicit use of drugs. That figure does not include high school drop outs.

— The U.S. Surgeon General estimates the number of young people under the age of 18 involved regularly with some form of illicit drugs runs into the millions.

— The Surgeon General reported in 1980 that the death rate has decreased in all age categories but one: 15 to 24, where the death rate continues to increase as a direct result of alcohol and drug abuse.

— Drug abuse will continue to be a contributing factor in the decision by 1,400 American teenagers to attempt suicide next year.

— And, a survey revealed that most marijuana smokers drive while high, causing nearly 10,000 fatal accidents each year.

The Concerned Citizens for Drug Prevention was formed ten years ago to combat such statistics, after a two-year study on the problem conducted by the Norwell/Hanover League of Women Voters.

To date, the group has been successful on several fronts, Forti said in a recent telephone interview.

Through State House lobbying efforts, the group was able to stop attempts to legalize marijuana and cocaine use in Massachusetts, Forti said.

They were also a main force behind tough new laws against open sale of drug paraphernalia and for stricter, mandatory sentencing of drug pushers, she said.

Now, says the forceful grandmother, the group wants to unite similar local grass-roots organizations against drug abuse from across the state to form a strong network of concerned citizens to develop a statewide media program, maintain lobbying at the State House, and influence the state Board of Education.

The group is sponsoring a luncheon/seminar Saturday, April 30 at the Lantana Restaurant in Randolph. Over 500 groups and individuals have been invited.

Their main concerns are to improve drug education in schools and to push for tougher sentencing for major drug traffickers.

"The old drug education programs in the schools are very much due to those who want to legalize marijuana," Forti claims. "Now we want some of the misinformation being spread about marijuana stopped. We also want to stop the use of marijuana as a medical treatment. It's not a medical drug; it's an illegal, dangerous drug."

The group hopes to push for a coordinated statewide updated drug and alcohol education program, stressing the adverse effects of drugs.

"The average age when youngsters start using pot is 11.6 years, and the marijuana being used today is ten percent stronger than it was before.

"People are concerned about quality education today and the fact that Johnny can't read. Well, Johnny can't read because he's stoned most of the time," she said.

The group is trying to get a $1 million drug education program approved. "They're saying there's no money and we'll have to wait until 1985. Yet the governor just signed a $37 million scholarship program. What about the kids who can't make it that far because of drug problems?"

She said another goal is to support much more rigorous sentencing for major drug traffickers "to decrease the availability of drugs to children."

She and others were outraged by a recent court ruling on the case of State Police Corporal Arnold Ellis Jr., convicted of smuggling $37 million worth of marijuana and sentenced to 12 years and fined $60,000.

The sentence was not a mandatory sentence, she said, and he could be eligible for parole in 3½ years. He and four others who were convicted were released by the judge and will be free for one year while the case is appealed.

"It's rare that any major drug traffickers are jailed," she claimed. "The little guys, yes; but not the major dealers who make drugs so available to our children.

"The media does a fair job in reporting the tons of drugs that are confiscated, but it's not always reported as well that full sentences are not served in these cases.

"The money (in drug smuggling) is a big attraction, and these people take into consideration that they may be caught and they know the sentence will be light," she said. "They're worse than mass murderers, as far as I'm concerned."

She recommended all judges and law makers attend a session of "Tough Love," a support group for parents of troubled adolescents. "If they saw the problems that arise there, they'd have a different idea on light sentencing for major drug dealers."

She said there has been great progress on drug prevention in the state, "but there is still more to go."

Today parents and organizations are striving to deal with the problem on local levels all across the state, but, she says, "there's a strength in numbers."

The group hopes to unite some of those separate, grass-roots organizations and coordinate a statewide effort against drug abuse.

For more information, the Concerned Citizens for Drug Prevention can be reached at 826-8205 or 826-2734.

Cohasset artists exhibit

Sunday, May 1, from 3 to 7 p.m. the American Heart Association's Annual Art for Heart exhibition will be held at the National Fire Protection Association on Willard Street in Quincy.

This exhibition will feature many Cohasset artists.

The sixteen artists will include: nationally recognized printmaker Corita Kent, award winning photographers Stan Grossfeld of the Boston Globe and Bill Greene of the Patriot Ledger, and sculptors, Walter Horak, Dennis Kowal and Charles Jones. Other artists represented will be Margaret Dillon, Jim Ann Howard, Wilfred Loring, Ann Nealy, Catherine Porter, Roy Thompsen, Cory Staid and Elaine and Murray Wentworth.

"The admission fee of $10 in addition to a 25 percent commission on all art work sold will go to support the American Heart Association's vital research, education and community programs" stated Mrs. Marge Atherton of Norwell, event chairman. "Art for Heart is a very special exhibition, the setting is breathtaking and, it is surely an occasion not to be missed."

For further information about "Art for Heart" contact the Southeast Massachusetts American Heart Association at 584-0446.

If you knew the facts about leasing, you'd never buy a car again!

For some unknown reason, the many advantages of leasing a car versus buying one continues to be one of the best kept secrets in the automobile business. Furthermore, a longstanding misconception states that you have to own or be in a business to lease a car. Not true! Anyone can lease. And most people should.

Come in and let us prove to you that leasing is truly the intelligent alternative to buying a car.

Selectmen to act on Historic District Commission

Selectmen were expected to decide the fate of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission at their April 27 meeting.

Last week, residents and members of the commission asked selectmen to rescind the recent appointments to the commission, and to seek resignations of the present members.

Thomas Atkinson of 59 Highland Ave., a resident of the Common and a member of the commission, told selectmen that Chairman Peter Wood sent the board a letter recommending six residents for appointment. Those appointments had never been discussed with the entire historic district commission, Atkinson said.

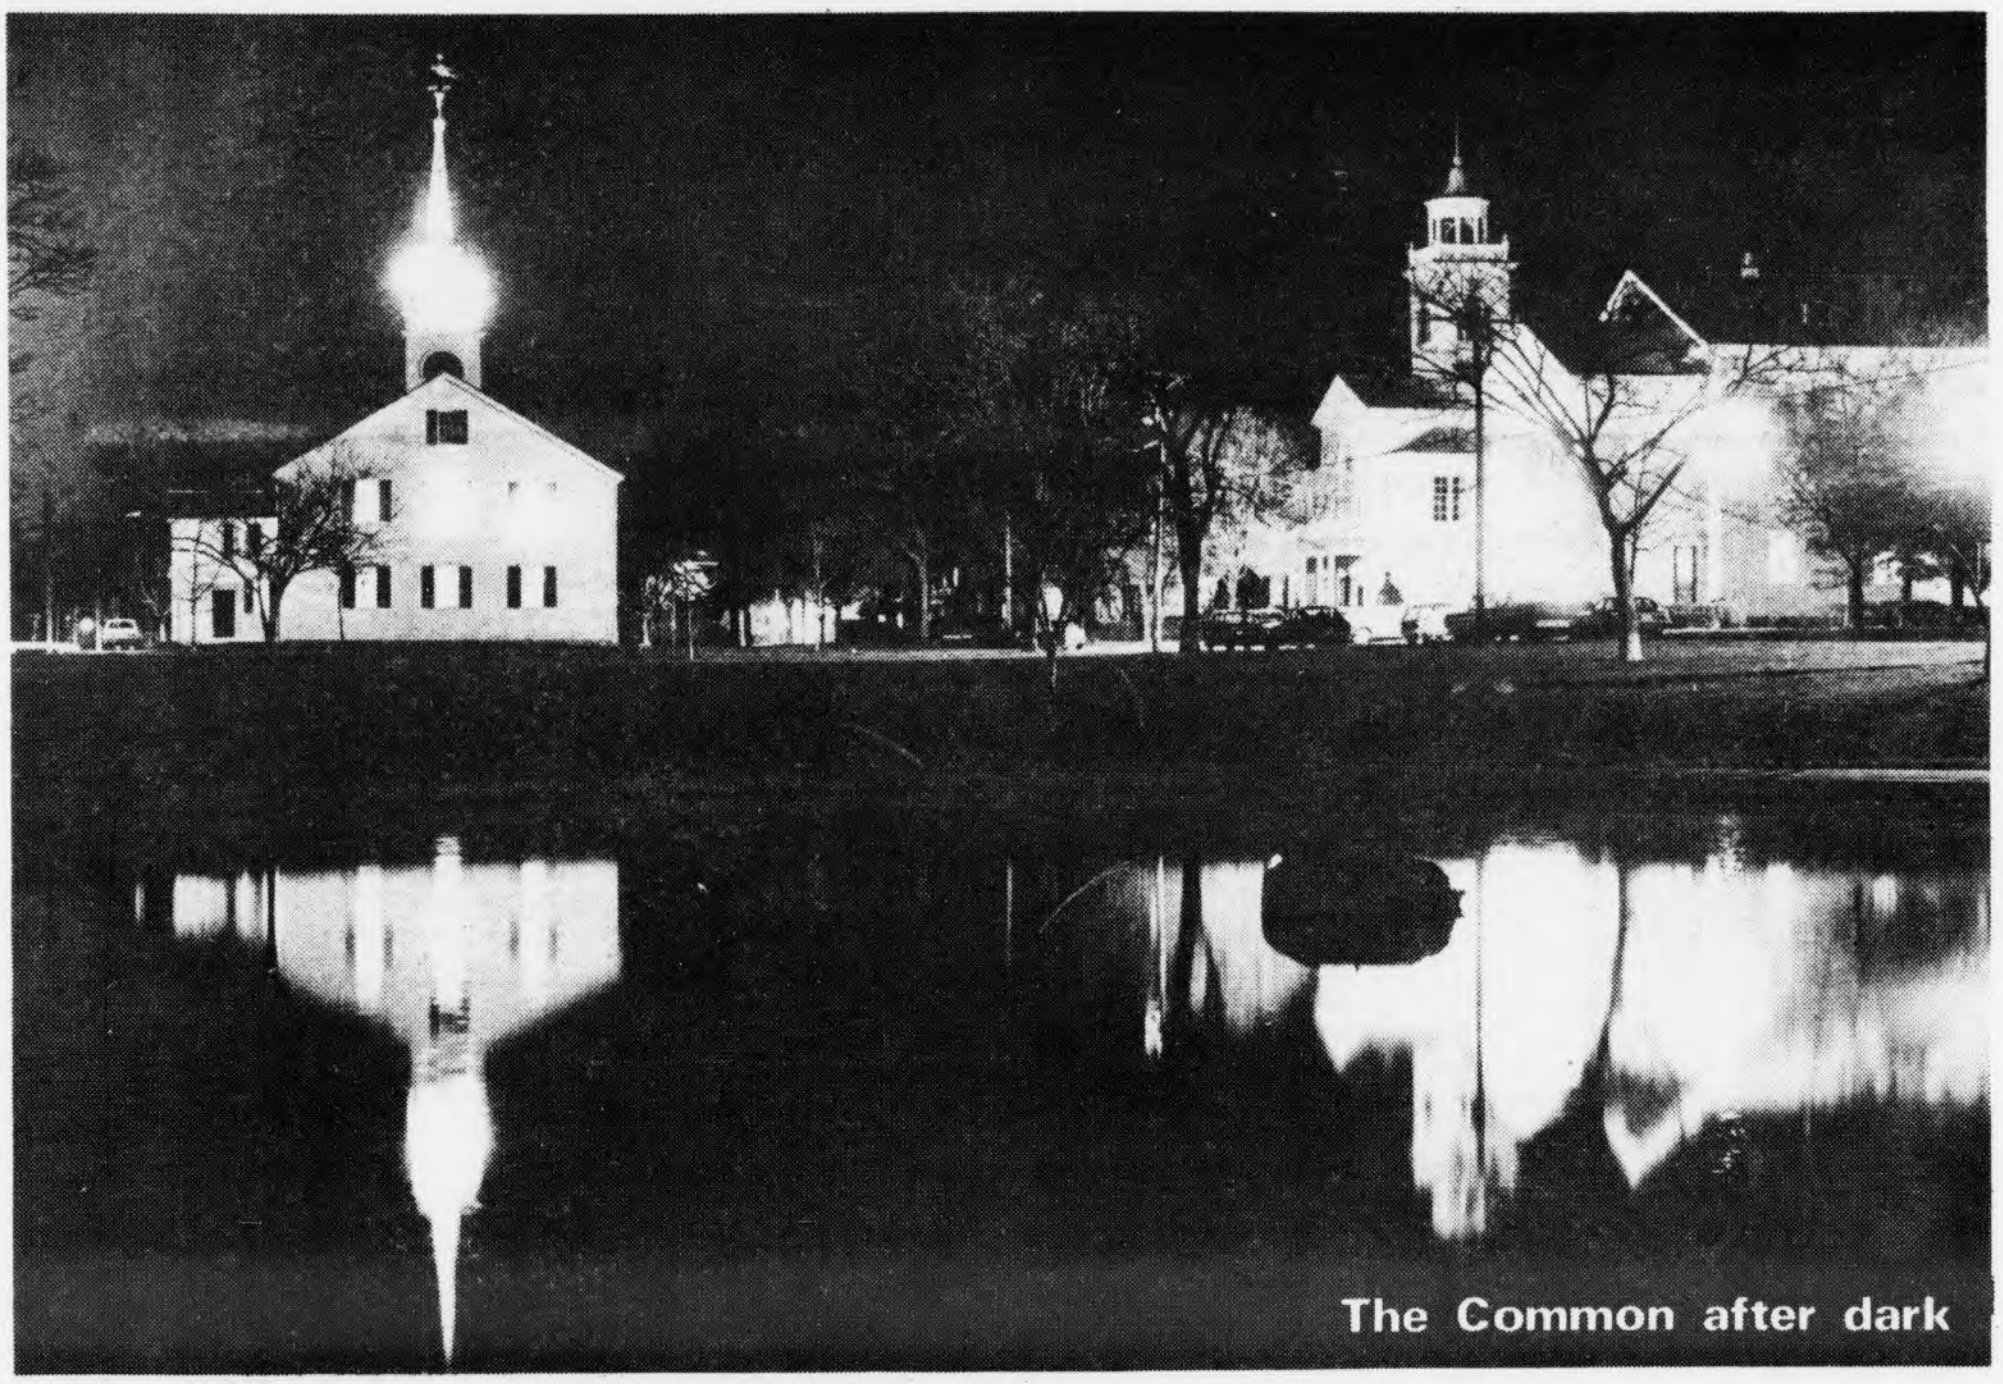
According to Atkinson, only Chairman Wood, Vice Chairman Barbara Weisenfluh and another member, Charles Wheelwright, approved the recommendations. Selectman had previously approved the list.

The list excluded the names of Carol Martin and Carolyn Horn who currently serve on the commission and asked to be considered for reappointment, he said.

Atkinson charged that at the present time, the "integrity and confidence of the commission is zero." He asked the board to dissolve the present commission "and show the good faith of selectmen."

Nicholas Manganaro, a resident of the Common district, said he had been "the target of three commission inquisitions." He had applied for approval to erect a fence around his home on No. Main St.

Manganaro said the first he knew he was in violation of the commission bylaws was when he read it in the newspaper. He also objected strongly to the commission's "style and attitude," he told selectmen.



Chairman Wood said he objected to the "insinuations and misstatements" made by residents attending the selectmen's meeting, and added he would turn over all commission minutes for the board's review. He said all applications for commission positions were handled according to bylaws "and in a timely manner."

"To the best of my knowledge, all violations were also handled according to bylaw," Wood said.

The chairman also noted the commission had approved 28 of the 29 applications presented to the commission "usually within 13 days."

"We have done the best we can do to adhere to the bylaws for the Common and the town of Cohasset. The people who serve on the commission do a commendable job," he added.

Teen drinking forum to focus on CHS survey

On Thursday, April 28 at 8 p.m. at Cohasset High School, there will be a forum on teen drinking patterns in Cohasset. A panel of professionals will meet with parents, students and interested citizens to discuss the findings of a recently completed survey done in the Cohasset Schools.

The survey, administered to the 375 students in grades 7, 8 and 9 by Health Education Coordinator, Michael Gill, was prompted by members of the Community Health Education Advisory Committee who expressed serious concerns about the sizeable number of parents in the community who allow unsupervised parties at their homes, apparently unaware of the drinking practices of today's teens.

The Community Health Education Advisory Committee feels that unsupervised parties at this age level may encourage illegal experimentation with alcohol and could possibly contribute to potentially dangerous situations for the young people involved.

In the survey, students were asked whether or not they have experimented with and still use alcohol. Forty-four percent of the grade seven students have experimented, while 37 percent still drink to some degree. Sixty-seven percent of the grade eight students have experimented, while 63 percent still drink to some degree. Eighty percent of the grade nine students have experimented, while 74 percent still drink to some degree.

Those grade seven students who have experimented with alcohol outside the home were asked to designate the age at which their experimentation began. Six percent began under the age of eight, 12 percent began between the ages of eight and nine, 69 percent began between the ages of ten and twelve, and the other 13 percent began between 13 and 15 years of age.

Students were given six choices as to where their drinking most often takes place. Sixty-five percent of the grade eight students who drink stated that they most often drink at parties where others were drinking and adults were not present.

Cohasset's week...

McKinnon staff available

State Sen. Allan McKinnon (D-Norfolk/Plymouth) has announced that a member of his staff will be available for office hours in Cohasset Town Hall at 9 a.m. on May 19.

Out-of-town student

The school committee approved a request to accept an out-of-town student on a tuition basis at Monday's meeting.

The committee also approved a maternity leave for the 1983-84 school year for Anne Marie League, high school math teacher and a leave of absence for '83-84 for Osgood School special needs teacher Margaret Smalzel.

Resignations were accepted by the committee from Librarian Joan Gatturna and Osgood activity aide Marie Dolan.

Dormitzer Merit finalist

Principal Richard Streeter of Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School announced that Paul Dormitzer was named as a National Merit finalist.

Approximately 13,000 high school seniors have been so honored for the 1982-83 academic year.

In addition, Paul is one of approximately 1,500 finalists to be awarded a corporate-sponsored four-year Merit Scholarship. Paul's award is made by Digital Corporation.

Paul is presently finishing his senior year in France under the auspices of the American Field Service.

He is the second member of his family to be named a Merit finalist. His brother, Philip, presently at Harvard, was so honored in 1981.

The revaluation project is continuing and through May 31, representatives of Appraisal Consultants of New England Corp. will cover the following areas: Chief Justice Cushing Way, the remainder of King St., Side Hill Rd., Turkey Hill Rd., Hull St., Cedar St., Fisher Rd., Lambert's Lane, Forest Ave., No. Main St., Surry Drive, Old Coach Rd., Heather Drive, Cedar Acres Drive, Cedar Acres Lane, Red Gate Lane, Ripley Rd., Sohier St., Pratt Court, Summer St., east side of So. Main St., Sankey Rd., Elm St., Border St., Black Horse Lane, West Gate Lane, Windsor Rd., Cedar Lane, Murry Rd., Stanton Rd., Beach St. and Joy Place.

All persons employed by Appraisal Consultants of New England Corp. will have identifications with photographs and all vehicle registrations are recorded with the Cohasset Police Department.

Assessors realize that having someone go through a resident's home may impose an inconvenience, but this is necessary if assessors are to assure complete fairness in the appraisal of your property.

They ask cooperation as each property is examined.

The process should not take more than 20 minutes. The person measuring and listing pertinent information is not placing the value on your property.

Drop spots

The Cohasset Mariner is adding a local drop spot for Cohasset news and advertising. Items can be left at the Cohasset Pharmacy as they have been in the past, or they can be dropped at Hennessey News, 3 Brook St. Both locations are in Cohasset Village.

The deadline for classified ads is Monday at 9:30 a.m. and for news copy, Tuesday at 9:30 a.m.

The Mariner will pick up on Friday, Monday and Tuesday. Hennessey's hours are 6 a.m. to 9 p.m. seven days a week.

Selectmen to act on Historic District Commission . . .

Dr. John Martin of 45 North Main Street, said residents of the Common are treated "as if we have done something wrong" when seeking the commission's approval. The commission must review all requests by Common residents who intend to alter the appearance of their home or property. There are 24 families residing in the Common district.

Selectmen said they would like copies of the commission's minutes from the past few months. They were scheduled to meet with all concerned residents and commission members at Wednesday's meeting.

Although selectman Rocco Laugelle recommended that the board rescind the previous appointments and "these people who want to stay on the commission should stay on," selectmen did not approve the motion. The board was to decide the matter at Wednesday's meeting.

In a letter to the Historic District Commission dated April 12, Elizabeth Stevenson wrote:

It is ironic from my standpoint that the telephone call came at such a time that prevented me from coming to the meeting. I did come over about 8:30 but upon looking in the door realized I physically didn't feel up to the meeting and left.

As a member of the commission I feel partly responsible for the present situation. From my standpoint I do not feel one person, namely Peter Wood, is responsible for our present state. We have left Peter, Charles and Barbara to act for the whole commission in part because we have not insisted on all working together and because we were not interested enough in doing the work ourselves.

At one or two meetings I, as others, have been outspoken and attempted to work towards changing the poor image we have. Yet I have in no way offered long-term leadership.

It seems to me that the level of commitment by persons like myself has contributed to the situation. We are willing to serve or almost be served. That compounded by Charles, Peter and Barbara's commitment to implement the bylaw has divided us into two facets. Since then we have become preoccupied with reacting to persons rather than dealing with the issues.

Where we go from here I'm not sure. I feel the leadership does need to change but I believe that's on everybody's part.

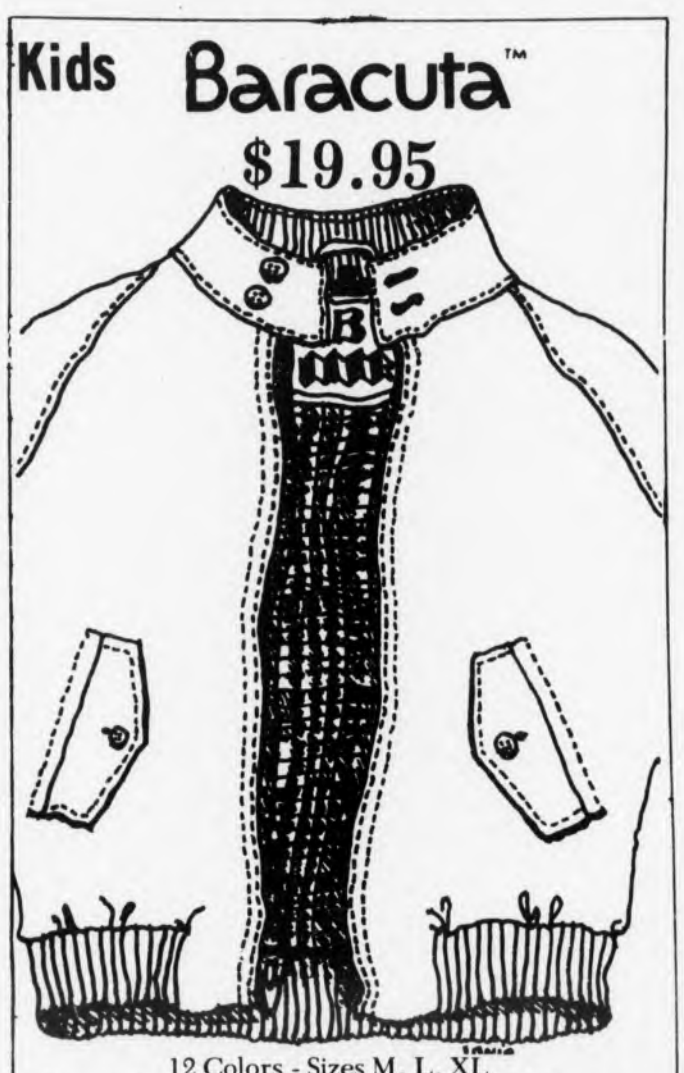
AFS Auction this Saturday

If you were there last year, you'll surely be there again. Ad this time you may even get there early.

After all, those unusual bargains and that spontaneous vacation were a big hit with the family last year.

This year's AFS Auction takes place Saturday, April 30 in Walton Rodgers Hall of St. Stephen's Church. The committee has been hard at work since February organizing entertainment, hospitality and fun for the many people who look forward to this exciting night.

A "silent auction" of selected items which can be bid on in writing has been added to this "social evening with auction of goods and services." Later in the evening the bids will be read and the items will go to the highest bidder.



The silent auction, previewing and social hour begin at 7:30. Linton Young and Jim Urmson will man the gavels at 8 to begin the live auction.

Angela Laitta and Denis Rossi were in charge of rounding up over 80 exciting acquisitions including a weekend on the Cape, three hours of flying in a private plane, a Sheraton weekend, an eight-course Italian dinner, a yard clean-up by Boy Scout Troop 28, an autographed Celtics basketball and lots more.

Karin Bartow catalogued it all and planned the agenda. Chartis Langmaid will do bookkeeping and sales while Joyce Hoffman and Barbara Spooner oversee hospitality.

Some parting thoughts from Henry Ainslie . . .

By Jane Lane

It used to be, he would conduct the business of the Norfolk County Commissioners, and hurry home to begin the Wednesday night session of the Cohasset selectmen.

It is small wonder that Henry Ainslie is basking in the realization of his respite from town politics. "It feels good to come and rest on Wednesdays," the 64 year-old former selectmen chairman says.

Ainslie had been a selectman in Cohasset for 12 years. During that time he confronted issues and controversies from which, he proudly states, he did not shy. He took the adulation with the criticism, and adds that at times he was deserving of neither.

But it was not until 1977, when law mandated a detailed financial campaign report from political candidates, that Ainslie first considered retrieving his hat from the ring. From that time, politics, even on the local level, changed for Ainslie.

The Cohasset native, whose great-grandparents were Cohasset residents in the early 1800's, boasts he has always been "my own man." He was not accustomed to financial advisers and committees to commandeer a professional campaign. Ainslie had always sent out brochures using his own money. He did not greet voters door-to-door. He never considered himself a politician.

"I always treated the office of selectman as a job. I wasn't going to try to sell myself," he says. "I welcomed anyone's vote, but I recognized the fact that people had the right not to vote for me."

From that time, Ainslie felt he had to compromise himself by conducting a professional political campaign. Until that time, he never considered not running for re-election, but after 1977, Ainslie always scrutinized his decision.

"Until that time, I always felt I had to do things my own way and with my own finances. Everything changed in 1977," he adds.

In many ways Ainslie is a most unlikely candidate for politics. He is a very personal man, not comfortable with the "social aspects of public office." He shunned most social occasions in town "every chance I could."

Ainslie does not view it as devotion, merely an interest that developed through the years.

He began his professional career as a mechanical engineer, working as an assistant chief engineer for an airline in 1947. He transferred his interest toward the design and manufacture of microwave antennas and eventually began a company with offices in Braintree, Malden and Canada.

His appointment to the advisory committee spurred an interest in municipal management and Ainslie took special courses at MIT. That led to a position with Norfolk County, and participation in a solid waste management program.

He is currently acting director of operations for Norfolk County.

He decided to try for elected office 12 years ago when he made his first attempt for selectman. As Ainslie recalls, it was a momentous decision, or a particularly dramatic one that propelled him into the political arena.

Ainslie, a man of few words, describes it simply, "I was talked into it by several of my friends who had faith in me, I guess. It wasn't something I sought."

His final decision this year not to seek re-election to the board was nearly as serene as those made in the past.

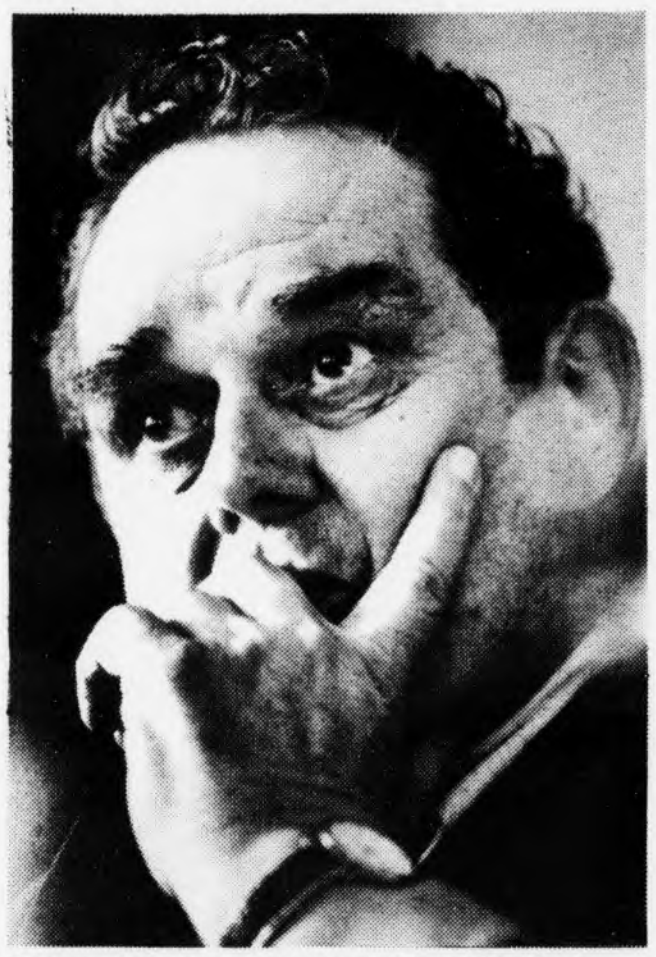
"Frankly, I feel I was getting an unreasonable amount of criticism for certain actions I felt I was not deserving of," he says. A less significant reason was his outspoken criticism of a five-member board of selectmen, and to a lesser extent, his satisfaction with the two unopposed candidates seeking election.

Ainslie does not see a lot of significant changes being made with the addition of two seats on the board of selectmen. He has argued the additional membership would prolong debate and discussions on issues, but he concedes many feel that is an advantage to the larger board.

He is an advocate of the open meeting law, but feels town business has become so complex that certain business could more effectively be conducted in private, rather than public sessions.

"I don't mean selectmen should be underhanded, but some things that should be said in private, but must be addressed in public, sometimes affect the overall decision," he said.

One such instance involved Ainslie's nephew. In an effort to be "above board," the selectmen chairman insisted the dismissal hearings be held in public sessions.



Ainslie and his nephew came under heavy repeated fire from the local press.

"I insisted the meetings be held in public, probably in violation of the law," Ainslie remembers. "But I wanted everything out in the open, probably to my own detriment."

The major issue Ainslie says is currently confronting the voters is the sewers, "whatever way it goes."

"As a selectman and a private citizen, I felt town meeting had appointed a people to see that a study was made of the problem. Bonafide engineers came up with recommendations which were costly, but they were designed to take care of the rpoblem."

Teen drinking forum to focus on survey. . .

Students were then asked about their reasons for drinking. In grade seven 24 percent of the students chose "getting high" as a common reason for drinking, and 33 percent chose "getting drunk." In grade eight, 61 percent of the students chose "to have fun" as their primary reason for drinking, and in grade nine, 15 percent of the students chose "to forget about problems" as a reason for drinking.

Fifty-three percent of the grade seven students and 42 percent of the grade eight students chose "the home" as their primary source for obtaining alcoholic beverages, and beer proved to be the most popular alcoholic beverage for this age group, although 25 percent of the grade eight students chose "hard liquor" as their most commonly consumed alcoholic beverage.

As alarming as these findings are, state and national figures indicate that Cohasset is no more or less unique than its neighbors. The problem is nation-wide and although it's very complex, the Cohasset School system and the community intend to continue their efforts to bring current factual information to the students so that they may be better prepared to make rational and responsible decisions about their use or misuse of alcohol.

The panel which will be addressing this issue Thursday evening will include: School Superintendent Eugene Crowell, psychologist Alan Gruber, school physician Robert Sceery, Director of S.S. Council on Alcoholism William Spinks, Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill and a Cohasset Police Dept. Representative.

Functions such as this have not been well attended in the past. The Community Health Education Advisory Committee urges parents, students and all interested residents to come and support the joint effort of school and community to help combat the increasing problem of youth and alcohol.

Thoughts from Henry Ainslie . . .

"If the federal, state or local government took a stand that a town could reverse its direction on every project, there would ' e no way anything could be done.

"A lot of work was put into that design. And it appears that much of the opposition is from segments who won't be involved in the initial phases of the design," Ainslie adds.

The former town official feels that there are "too many pressure groups to get reversals of decisions that shouldn't be reversed." In this particular case, he says, the town may lose federal and state funding and be faced with eventually trying to solve its sewer problems alone.

"I can't understand some of the arguments against it," he admits.

"It's not that these people are wrong. But it's the timing of the thing. If they had ideas, they should have come up during the original planning of the design."

Ainslie says he will miss the intense involvement with town politics, although he is just beginning to unwind from the pressure.

As for future political ambitions, Ainslie would just as soon keep such stuff from serious consideration.

"I doubt it," he responds, when asked if he would consider public office in the future. But as much as he dislikes the description, Ainslie, the politician, quickly adds, "I will give you a flat no, but I always leave my options open."

He would like to continue his career with Norfolk County for a few more years, but admits he is not one to sit idle.

Perhaps like other leaders, Ainslie will make his political comeback as a septuagenarian.

Gymnasts Caroline Arbury and Amy Hobbs build strength with guidance from World Champion Bill Blanks.

Cohasset gymnasts Caroline Arbury and Amy Hobbs recently took part in a work out in strength, flexibility and endurance given by three time World Champion in Tae Kwo Do, Bill Blanks at the Cape Cod Gymnastic School in Scituate.

Bill has a black belt in four of the martial arts. He feels all athletes should enjoy working out and want to improve their minds and bodies in order to become better at their sport.

☐Ellen Hoffman successfully completed a 34-week course in energy technology sales and marketing at Massasoit Community College in a program co-sponsored by Massasoit and Southeastern Massachusetts University and funded by Bay State Skills Corporation.

The program was designed for unemployed workers those laid off and/or victims of Prop. 2½ governmental cutbacks. The effort was funded and taught in part by members of 32 local energy firms.

☐June Robbins of South Main Street was designated to the dean's list for outstanding scholarship at Dean Junior College for the fall semester of the current academic year.

☐Gail E. Smart, Cohasset, MA, was one of 17 students at Colby-Sawyer College (New London, N.H.) who performed in an oiginal children's theater production of "Pinocchio" this week. Gail played the part of the cat in the musical before over 800 central New Hampshire school age children, plus two performances for "older kids."

Gail, a liberal arts major at Colby-Sawyer, is the daughter of Mrs. William J. Smart, 42 Nichols Road.

☐Heather Briggs, Vermont College Class of 1982, completed her recruit training at the U.S. Navy Recruit Training Command in Orlando, Florida. Heather was promoted to Seaman (E-3) and she is awaiting travel to her next assignment in Guam. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Briggs of Nashua, N.H. and Cohasset.

☐Shirley Marten recently attended the Northeast Regional Conference of the National Council for International Visitors in Baltimore. She is a member of the board of directors and an office volunteer for the Boston Center for International Visitors, a locally sponsored, non-profit organization which plans professional programs, sightseeing tours and home hospitality for 800 visitors annually. These visitors are selected by U.S. embassies all over the world for leadership qualities in their own academic business or cultural field.

Those who would like to participate in the Center's program for developing international relationships and cross-cultural understanding, by offering some kind of hospitality or volunteering in the office in Mt. Vernon St., Boston, should call Marten, 383-9829 or the Center, 742-0460.

☐Polly Logan may have moved out of Cohasset, but certainly not out of politics...she was mentioned in Norma Nathan's "The Eye" column as being "In." Will be fun to see what she's doing next.

☐Every morning, no matter what the weather, Ruth Pratt and Ruth Goodwin can be spotted walking around Cohasset. Last week they each had a bunch of forsythia in their hands, and truly looked like a breath of spring.

☐Heard good news yesterday, the Bishop family is moving back to our town at the end of the school year. It will be good to have them back.

☐Peter O'Loughlin is grounded again with his bad leg. One sure thing, next time he charters a boat he'll gladly huire a crew to go with it. He has been laid up for too long!

☐Harry Ritter reminds one of the Pied Piper as he and his walking companions take to the road again. When they start this routine, you know good weather is here to stay.

☐If Cohasset seems a little bit empty this week, it's for a very good reason. Most of the senior class is in Florida, Fort Lauderdale, to be exact. The temperature is reported to be in the 80s, with abundant sunshine. They shouldn't even need the make-up artists for the class play when they return.

☐It was good to see Bill Poland back in the political arena last weekend, and it's nice to have him back in Cohasset.

☐Speaking of the Music Circus, the schedule is out. That signals the beginning of Spring, but it is never official until the tent goes up.

'Mister Donut' prepares for plaza opening

By Mike Berger

Those in Cohasset who rise early or work the night shift will soon be able to get a cup of coffee and a donut at 5 a.m.

David Santiano of Marshfield will be getting up even earlier to bake the donuts for a "Mister Donut" franchise to open in Cushing Plaza by June 1. The store will be adjacent to Medi Mart.

In another Cushing Plaza development, Rick Peters of Cohasset will open "Sea 'n Cheese," a seafood retail store by May 3.

Mister Donut

"It's not going to be your typical Mister Donut store. We are going to have quarry tiled floors and several booths installed so people can sit in groups of four. I also specialize in specialty type baking such as Danish, brownies, macaroons, cup cakes, croissants, turnovers, fruit squares, bagels, and a five varieties of muffins and soups," said Santiano.

Zaven A. Dadekian and David Santiano, owner of the Mister Donut franchise on Route 53 in Hanover (across from Hanover Mall) have signed a long-term lease on the 1,550 square foot store.

Renovations are already underway.

Santiano has many years experience, both in the baking and management/ownership aspects of Mister Donut operations. He said he maintains high quality and personalized service in his Hanover store with emphasis on fresh baked donuts and pastry and "always-fresh coffee."

Dadekian said he and Quinn, Plaza manager, interviewed several potential coffee and donut store owners and franchise operators and selected Santiano because of his excellent reputation and personal involvement in the day-to-day functions of his stores.

"We were looking for the type of businessman in the coffee/donut and pastry area that we found in The Corner Meat Shop and other businesses that we have selected for Cushing Plaza in the past year and a half. Santiano certainly fits that mold and offers a high quality product and personal service," said Quinn.

"The Mister Donut store, as well as other new stores at Cushing Plaza, will create new jobs for area residents."

Santiano expects between 17 and 20 employees will be hired and help wanted ads will be advertised.

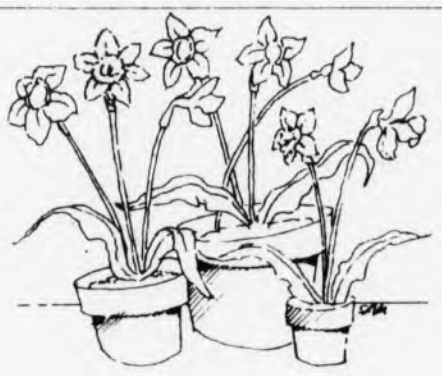
The opening date for the store will be announced in the near future, although Santiano expects the store will open by June 1.

Tentative store hours will be 5 a.m. to 10 p.m., seven days a week.

Sea 'n Cheese

Peters plans to locate his store in the former Party Pantry next to the Casual Male and will be a 1,170 square foot building.

The store will offer seafood, fresh fish, cheese, prepared seafood dinners, fresh coffee, imported and domestic wine and related gourmet condiments.



Hours will be 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Saturday. Peters and his sister, Linda, will manage the store.

Next Plaza Project

Quinn said the plaza management will be refining new parking, landscape, walkways and other environmental plans and submitting them to the planning board for final approval.

At The Corner Meat Shop opening — John Spence, chairman of Rockland Trust Bank Board, Zaven Dadekian, Cushing Plaza owner, and David Santiano, who will soon open a Mister Donut store at the Plaza.

Innovative

The Cohasset and Scituate School Committees have approved innovative courses to combat drug, alcohol and family problems.

In Scituate we call attention to an April 27 special alcohol and drug education program for all juniors and seniors. Guest speakers include Scituate Police Chief Walter Driscoll, Tom Healey of the Woburn District Courts Drunk Driving program, David Sheridan of Alcoholics Anonymous and Alateen of Scituate. Other speakers include teenagers who have experienced problems with alcohol and other drugs.

This day-long program, held Wednesday, April 27, consisted of a keynote address to juniors and seniors by Otton Moulton, the Director of the "National Federation of Parents for a Drug-Free Youth."

On Thursday, April 28 at 8 p.m. there will be a forum on teen drinking patterns of Cohasset High School. Several professionals will meet with parents, students and residents to discuss findings of a recently completed survey in Cohasset schools.

The survey was administered to 375 students in Grades 7, 8 and 9 by Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill and was prompted by members of the Community Health Education Advisory Committee.

Several health education advisory committee members were concerned about the large number of parents who will allow unsupervised parties in their homes.

This committee and Mike Gill merit applause in general for raising health education concerns in the community, specifically for drafting the CHS drug and alcohol policy.

It is also worth noting that the health education advisory committee and the school committee has approved a new course, Marriage and Family Living.

This course will be offered to seniors on a daily half-year basis. The curriculum will include growth and human development, "the life cycle," aging, social issues and the family, along with consumer and emotional health. If successful, the course will be designed for lower grades.

There is an argument that all of these subjects should be left to the individual families. That's all well and good if the families cooperate. But this isn't the case if you read the weekly police logs in both communities.

In both Scituate and Cohasset we appreciate the work of residents, officials and teachers who are willing to address these issues and seek solutions rather than bury their heads in the sand.

Commission authority

Article 23 of the 1972 annual town meeting authorized the sewer commissioners to make contracts and execute on behalf of Cohasset all necessary documents as they deem necessary or advisable in carrying out the act. However, the minutes of an August 12 sewer commission meeting authorized the board's chariman to act on behalf of the town as its agent in filing application for, executing agreements regarding, and performing any and all other actions necessary, to secure for the applicant such grants and grant payments for the design and construction of sewage treatment facilities as may be made available to the town.

"...Safety-wise I like it...but what about the women's model...?"

They were not strangers

By Claire McDonough

The first time I saw Maureen she was red and wrinkled. Her head sported blond fuzz in lieu of hair and her eyes wouldn't focus. Johnnie squeezed my hand, and we thanked you, Lord. She was the most beautiful baby in the world.

Last Saturday she came down the aisle of St. Mary's church on her father's arm. She was pale, but achingly beautiful. She looked so serious, and her hand shook.

When they reached the altar, Johnnie kissed her, and handed her to Bill. He was giving our daughter away to a beloved stranger.

Beloved, because we have come to know and love Bill over the past years. His humor, his strength, his love for Maureen and hers for him have endeared him to us.

But still, Lord, a stranger. He wasn't there when her knees were always covered with bandaids. When we went three days and three nights without sleep because her temperature continued to soar and we thought she had rheumatic fever. The time she jumped off her swing set and her hood caught and by the time I got her down she had stopped breathing.

He didn't watch her make her First Communion or see the wildflowers she picked for me every May. He didn't hear her cry at night because she dreamed baby chickens were chasing her. Neither did he hear her delighted laughter because, like you, Lord, she looked at the world and saw that it was good.

Maureen relinquished her father's arm and turned to Bill. They looked at each other with such trust and love that my heart turned over. I glanced across the aisle at Bill's mother. Did she see Maureen as a beloved stranger? Were her memories of a little curly haired boy who picked dandelions for her and could never find socks that matched? Did she remember sitting by his sick bed and praying his fever would drop? He was her baby — her youngest child.

Bill looked so serious, and I suppose I was glad. After all, he had threatened to respond to "Do you take this woman..." with, "Why, soitenly," tuck Maureen's hand under his arm and exit dancing and singing.

Thank you, Lord, for giving them both a sense of humor. You and I know how much they will need it over the years ahead.

I reached for Johnnie with one hand and for a wad of Kleenex with the other. He coughed, and I knew it was because he was nervous.

Father Gillespie began to speak of the sacrament of marriage. His words were moving. He told them that You would not fail them. He spoke of sacrifices that would be made. He spoke of love. His words were moving, and his words were true.

I gave up trying not cry. I held on to Johnnie's hand as tightly as I could and he squeezed back. Maureen and Bill started back down the aisle. They were beloved, but they were not strangers to each other. They were the most beautiful couple in the world. We thanked You, Lord.

Cohasset Common Historic District Commission

Letters

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Mariner in its edition of April 20, carries on page 7 an article written by Patricia Anne Walsh, the subject of which is a highly publicized recent meeting of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission.

Without commenting upon the events of that meeting or upon the reporting thereof, I wish to point out a serious innaccuracy in the headline or title of the article.

In her article, Walsh correctly refers to the particular agency involved by its title "Cohasset Common Historic District Commission." The Mariner, in its headline, incorrectly titles the agency as the "Historic Commission."

Suffice it to say there is not, and never has been, an agency in the Town of Cohasset of that name. There is, of course, a "Cohasset Historical Commission" in the town. It is a separate entity, totally independent of the Historic District Commission at the Common, serves a different function, derives its existence from a different enabling statute and from a different Town By-Law. It does not participate in regulatory functions at Cohasset Common since it has no regulatory power, and serves primarily as an advisory agency in the field of historic preservation within the Town. It also suffers from being confused with the District Commission at the Common.

In a letter to the Mariner dated August 6, 1982, while the District Commission was involved in an ongoing proceeding regarding a proposed color change at the Town Common, and because of a reporting inaccuracy mistakenly calling that Commission by the name of the town's other Historical Commission, I wrote at some length about the difference between the two agencies. Although a number of townspeople commented favorably about the clarification I tried to

Report from the state house

By State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray

Battlelines were clearly drawn last week over a proposal from Governor Dukakis which would effectively dismantle Prop. 2½.

As legislators prepare to debate the state budget for Fiscal 1983, which begins July 1, they were presented with a package of local aid proposals including the one that raised the battle flags on Beacon Hill.

At issue is legislation which would allow the city councils or town meeting members to override Prop. 2½ in the 11 communities that have not yet met the property tax rate of 2½ percent of the fair market value.

When 2½ became law in 1980, an important part of it was the provision giving only a majority of the voters the right to override.

While Dukakis supporters argue that the Governor's move to rescind this section only affects 11 communities, we should look at the numbers.

Under the Governor's plan, 42 percent of the new local aid money would go to the 11 communities not yet in compliance with Prop. 2½.

While it is reasonable that these communities, mostly the state's older cities, would take longer to reach compliance with 2½, we have to be sure that we do not penalize the 340 cities and towns that have made the spending cuts and adjusted their property tax rates.

The 11 communities involved are: Boston, Brockton, Cambridge, Chelsea, Greenfield, Lynn, Pittsfield, Quincy, Revere, Somerville and Worcester.

While Prop. 2½ may have been "drafted in suburbia," it was voted for in the cities; it is the taxpayers in the cities who most need and deserve their FY '84 tax break, and who should not have their override choice taken from them and given to the city council.

There is no reason, no excuse, to take local aid from your communities and give it to those cities, which, except for Boston, are already receiving enough new aid to cover most of their FY '84 losses; some are making a profit this year.

A key argument in the local aid fights in the past several years has been over local aid plans that reimburse a community more than 50 percent of its estimated loss under 2½. All 11 communities involved would receive more than 50 percent of their estimated loss; the issue has not yet been settled.

Planning board action

To the Editor:

The proposal by Winchester Associates to build 12 houses on approximately five acres of land directly behind the Beechwood Ballpark will forever affect the quality of life for all of the citizens of this community.

With an utter disregard to the people of this town the planning board has allowed a small group with a vested interest to literally stack homes on land that was never intended by nature to be built upon.

Any competent person who knows Beechwood and the lay of the land must certainly be aware that any building directly behind the park will render the field inaccessible for all but the summer months.

For anyone to ever consider building 12 homes in such a small wet area is inconceivable, but for them to receive approval from the planning board is incomprehensible!

Furthermore, because there is no town sewerage available, 12 new septic tanks must be packed into the rocky clay soil of this area. Since water only runs downhill, much of this sewerage will end up draining towards the ballpark.

Perhaps old timers are the only ones aware, but this sewerage will undoubtably drain directly into the brook that runs underground beneath the field. From there it flows past the firehouse down to the Meadow Brook and directly into the Beechwood River. As we all know, the Beechwood River is the connector between the reservoir and Lily Pond. Contamination by pollutants of the town water supply is unavoidable.

Action by citizens can be taken to prevent the destruction of the quality of life in Cohasset. This is but one important situation in a long line of many where monied interests must be set aside by citizens who have a real interest in their community.

make, it appears that the Mariner's staff member in charge of headlines overlooked the message.

The title in your April 20 edition again wrongfully implies that the Cohasset Historical Commission is involved in the regulatory disputes at Town Common.

As a member of the town Historical Commission (an agency authorized under Ch. 40, Sec. 8D of the General Laws of Massachusetts) I would like once again to point out the difference between that Commission and the Common Historic District Commission, which itself is an agency authorized under Ch. 40C of the General Laws.

Though my personal opinion is favorable to the goals of the Common District Commission, and I do favor the efforts of the District Commission in their attempts to preserve the architectural integrity of the Town Common area, I would ask the Mariner to please be more accurate in identifying the two Commissions by using their correct names in print. To confuse the two can easily obscure the role that the Cohasset Historical Commission plays within the community, and in effect, does a disservice to the citizens who volunteer their services so willingly to achieve the goals of the town's Historical Commission.

Gwinn responds

To the Editor:

This statement is in reply to the article "Cohasset counsel says grant acceptance void," page 1, April 15, 1983, issue of the Patriot Ledger.

1) At the August 12, 1982, meeting of the Cohasset Board of Sewer Commissioners, it was voted to delegate to whoever was chairman, the authority to accept the sewer grant. I was chairman on April 11, 1983, when I signed the grant acceptance and I was chairman during the day of April 13, 1983, when I delivered the signed grant acceptance to the state.

2) In accordance with town bylaws calling for annual election of board chairmen, following town custom, I called for the election of a new chairman at the first regular board meeting after Town Election, said meeting to be held April 13, 1983, at 8 p.m.

3)DeSantis' charge of "maneuvering behind the backs of the voters" in accepting the grant is not credible. Since the November 29 Special Town Meeting, I have stated many times my intention to accept the grant when offererd if the town were still

Library Information Line . . .

Each week the Paul Pratt Library of Cohasset, the Ventress Memorial Library of Marshfield and the Scituate Public Library present a selection of questions and responses handled by the library's reference departments.

This week's column is written by Shirley Niswander of the Scituate Town Library.

What is the origin of the hamburger?

The answer came from "The American Heritage Cookbook" published by the editors of "American Heritage Magazine." "The name for the hamburger," these editors write, "is derived from Hamburg, Germany, a city that once enjoyed prosperous commerce with the Baltic Provinces in Russia, where shredded raw meat (we now know it as steak tartare) comprised a large part of the cuisine. It is from them that Hamburg developed an appreciation of the hamburger though it was left to Americans to place the meat in the bun and create what is now considered an American specialty. Americans have eaten hamburgers without buns, of course. Salisbury steak came into being at the turn of the century, promoted by the physican and food faddist, J.H. Salisbury who recommended eating ground steak three times a day for the relief of colitis, pernicious anemia, asthma, bronchitis, rheumatism, tuberculosis, gout and hardening of the arteries."

What are the three major rock groups that form the earth's crust?

The "McGraw Encyclopedia of Science and Technology" states that the answer to this question is: sedimentary, igneous and metamorphic.

What is a money market fund?

A concise answer to this question was found in the March 1983 issue of "Fact Magazine." Money market funds, "Fact" tells us, are mutual funds that invest in short-term money market securities such as Treasury bills, short-term corporate debt, commercial bank certificates of deposit and repurchase agreements. Money funds are run by brokerage firms and investment companies. There are several types: general purpose money funds which hold a variety of money market investments; government-only money funds, which restrict their investments to short-term securities backed by the federal government; and tax-free money funds, which are short-term municipal bond funds.

What is the longest continuous run of any show?

The 1983 edition of the "Guiness Book of World Records" gives the answer as Agathy Christie's "Mousetrap." This thriller opened at the Ambassador Theater, London, November 25, 1952 and moved after 8,862 performances to St. Martin's Theater, London, March 25, 1974.

The 12,481st performance November 25, 1982, marked the thirtieth anniversary of the opening of "The Mousetrap."

under the Agreement for Judgement as filed with the Superior Court. It would seem to me that Town Counsel Henderson, as an officer of the court, has no option but to advise my acceptance of the offer.

4) At the suggestion of the Board of Selectmen and Town Counsel, I requested an extension of time for acceptance of the sewer grant, as Guild said, "until certain state and federal environmental certificates are issued." In a letter dated April 11, 1983, Assistant Attorney General Ann Rogers answered no extension but "If Cohasset has shown its good faith by accepting the planning advance (i.e. the sewer grant) the Division (of Water Pollution Control) will consider a request for delay (in executing the M & E contract) after the extent of the required change is known." I therefore accepted the grant offer on April 11. Although not germane, Town Counsel's letter to me of April 5, 1983, verified the legality of accepting the grant offer with respect to Article 4.

Acting upon the August 12, 1982, authorization, assured as to the legality of acceptance, and aware of the position stated in Asst. Attorney General's letter of April 11, I delivered the signed agreement to the state. I have consistently and publicly said that I would not act in violation of the Superior Court. I maintain that as the authorized chairman then of the Board of Sewer Commissioners, my act was necessary, legal and taken in good faith.

Selectmen will decide

Night hours sought for Town Hall

By Jane Lane

Selectmen are expected to decide Wednesday night, April 27 whether to open the town hall offices one night a week.

Selectmen chairman Mary Jane McArthur made the suggestion at Monday night's planning session of the new five-member board. She said several residents have mentioned the difficulty in conducting town business at town hall because they work during the day.

Town hall is currently closed at 4:30 p.m., and many working residents can not get to town hall before that time, she said.

She suggested the town hall offices only, be opened from 5:30 to 8 p.m. on Thursday. Town hall employees, not under union contract, would be given Friday afternoon off from 1 to 4:30 p.m., each week.

Although a formal vote was not taken on the suggestion, selectmen indicated a willingness to go along with McArthur's recommendation.

The chairman also suggested selectmen should be available one Thursday night on a quarterly interval to talk informally with residents. Selectmen seemed to like the idea, and joked they could bill it as "Coffee with Mary Jane McArthur."

McArthur had suggested that coffee could be served to residents who wanted an opportunity to chat with the town officials on an informal basis. The non-agenda meetings would be held on a quarterly basis each year, she added.

Selectmen also made several other recommendations but took no votes regarding policies and procedures during Monday night's meeting.

Each selectman will compose a list of the various town boards and committees on which they would prefer to be a liaison. Better communication among boards and selectmen was their ultimate goal, they decided.

A legal workshop in which town counsel will explain details of the open meeting law and the conflict of interest law to all town boards and committees is scheduled for June 7.

Selectmen also decided that before July 1, a procedure should be developed for issuing Class I, II, and III auto licenses to local businesses. This is the proper procedure for the selectmen to follow as issuing authority, according to Town Counsel Richard Henderson.

Selectmen also discussed closing the agenda for Wednesday night sessions each week on Monday at 10 a.m. Any emergency item will be included in the selectmen's agenda regardless of the schedule.

But for regular items, the board agreed the Monday deadline is appropriate. A Monday holiday would necessitate moving the deadline for submission of agenda items to Tuesday at 10 a.m.

Towing contract draws confusion

Confusion abounds in the town's efforts to award a contract for towing services.

Francis Mitchell, owner of Mitchell's Repair Shop on Rte. 3A, says he will ask selectmen to re-advertise bids for the towing contract.

Last week selectmen awarded the bid to Cohasset Craftsmen. They were the only bidders for the service to tow illegally parked vehicles.

When selectmen reviewed the responses to the bids last week, Craftsmen owner Anthony Abromowich said he would seek legal counsel if the board did not award a contract that night. Specifically, Abromowich objected to the way in which the two bids were opened by selectmen the previous week.

It was advertised the towing bids for the town would be opened on April 15 at 8:30 p.m. Although Abromowich and his wife planned to attend the bid opening, no one was at town hall at the scheduled time. It was later learned that Executive Secretary Mark Lanza opened the two bids earlier that evening.

At selectmen's session last Wednesday night, Lanza recommended the bids be re-advertised and a contract be awarded at a later date. Abromowich objected to that suggestion, saying it would open the bidding to other competitors.

After reviewing the two bids last week, Lanza later recommended selectmen award a year's contract to Cohasset Craftsmen. The basis of the award was because of the shorter response time and the indoor storage of towed vehicles offered by Abromowich's company.

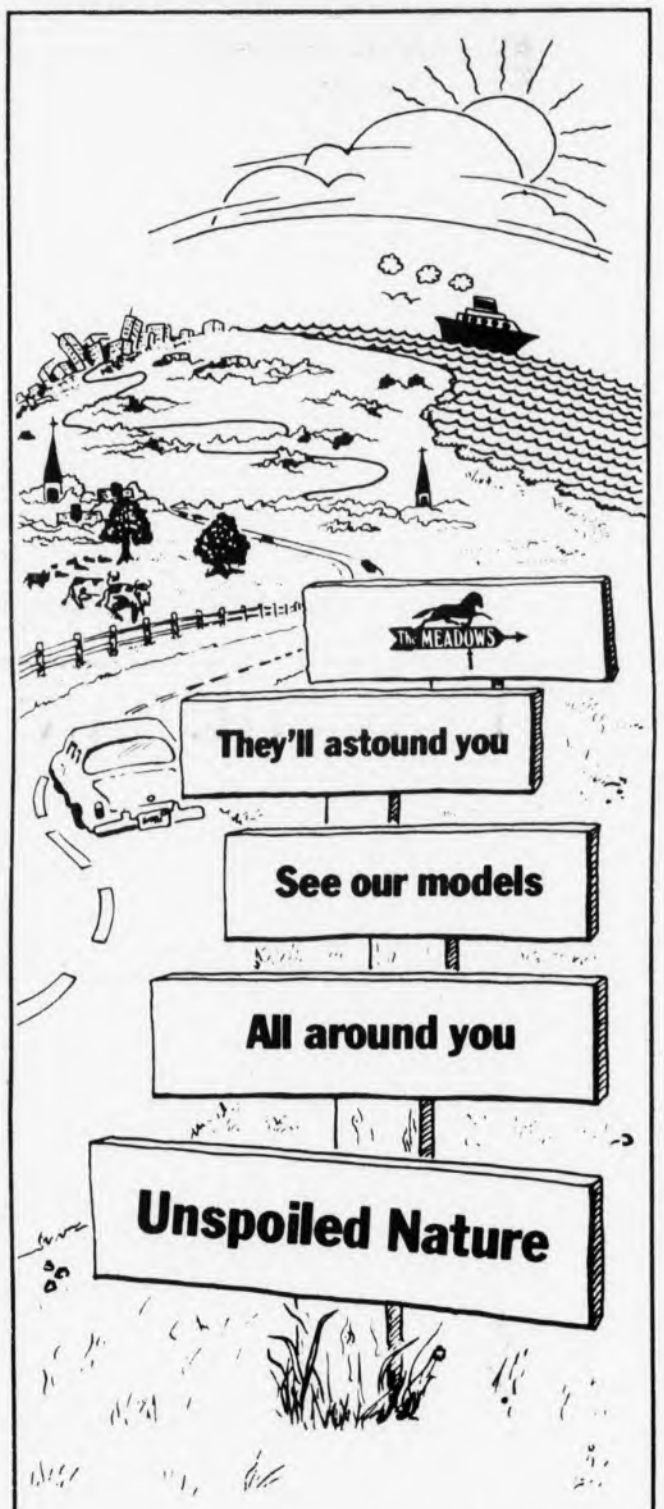
Mitchell said he could respond to a towing situation in an average 20-40 minutes. Abromowich, who lives in Hingham, wrote he could respond to a call within eight minutes.

Although the other four selectmen favored the contract award to Cohasset Craftsmen, Frank England opposed the move. He could not understand the discrepancy in response time and said the experience factor was with Mitchell who towed vehicles for the police department for 20 years.

Selectman John DeBassio, former police chief, agreed he never had any complaints with Mitchell's 24-hour service to the department.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson, who attended last week's session, told selectmen that any decision the board made could be held liable according to state statute. Because the proper and legal method of opening competitive bids was not followed, Henderson said the contract could be appealed to the Department of Labor and Industry.

Even if the bids were re-advertised, the final decision could be appealed because of the initial failure to comply with state bid regulations, he said.



Selectman Cliff Mitman said he favored awarding the contract that night "because either way we have a potential problem. I would think we would be in less jeopardy if the time was off by one hour, than if we reopen the whole procedure and obtain different bidders," he said.

Selectmen opposed reopening the bid last week, by a vote of 3-2. And later, by a vote of 4-1 with England opposed, selectmen agreed with Lanza's recommendation to award the one-year contract to Cohasset Craftsmen.

Cohasset sewer commissioners to meet with Hull board

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Cohasset Sewer Commissioners planned to meet with Hull Sewer Commissioners April 27 regarding the possibility of tieing in with Hull's sewerage system.

Cohasset Chairman Charles DeSantis wrote to John Struzziery, chairman of the Hull Permanent Sewer Commission and said, "The Town of Cohasset is currently exploring methods to rehabilitate or to modify its present wastewater treatment plant. We intend to look at a variety of options in order to arrive at the most sensible, most readily implementable, and most cost effective choice. Among the options that we wish to explore is tieing in the present Cohasset sewer collection system with the Town of Hull's.

"Our engineer, Ward Engineering Associates of Springfield, has done some preliminary estimates on this possibility. It appears that a closer look at this option is warranted. Accordingly, the Town of Cohasset Sewer Commission would be delighted to discuss this issue with your commission. Ward Engineering is conducting a preliminary study for the entire Town of Cohasset during the next eight weeks. If you are interested in a discussion with us, please let us know at your earliest convenience."

Copies of the letter were sent to Hull and Cohasset selectmen. Mary Jane McArthur, Cohasset Selectmen Chairman, told DeSantis that if the Hull Selectmen attend the proposed meeting, the Cohasset Selectmen would also like to attend.

DeSantis said he would also like to discuss dumping Cohasset septage at the Hull facility. Jill Tollefson, facility coordinator, wrote April 11, that "we...believe that Hull and Cohasset can establish mutually agreeable guidelines and procedures to allow dumping of septage at the Hull facility."

Hull approached Cohasset two years ago regarding sewer system connections, Hull Selectman Claudette Fitzsimmons said. However, they received no reply from Cohasset.

Former boards of Cohasset Sewer Commissioners were in favor of Cohasset building its own central sewage system.

Ward said that laying mains to Hull might cost $1.8 million and may save Cohasset $6 million for a new plant building. The Hull sewer plant has a three million gallon capacity, but according to Ward is only presently processing an average of 900,000 gallons a day.

Hull is presently considering whether or not to sue Whitman and Howard, who designed their plant. Hull Selectwoman Nancy Burns said last week that Hull Town Counsel James Lampke is still exploring avenues.

"The Hull plant suffers from infiltration when there are heavy rains," Manuel Salvador, Cohasset plant operator told the Cohasset Commissioners at a recent meeting.

Burns said there have also been two suits filed against the Hull facility: one by residents of the area, and one because of property on Marginal Road where the pumping station is located. "Town meeting voted $750,000 about a year ago for engineering, repairs, and legal fees" in connection with difficulties at the Hull plant, she added.

Assistant Town Counsel Stephen Ryder said he had authored a "very technical" two page letter to the Secretary of Environmental Affairs. The letter asks for an advisory opinion regarding whether the state violated MEPA regulations in offering Cohasset the $1.1 million Planning Advance without a prior environmental review.

JOSEPH GWINN

The commissioners rescinded some of their votes of a period meeting pertaining to the authorities of commissioner Joseph Gwinn, and re-voted some less stringent motions. DeSantis said he had "reconsidered" some of the wording.

Gwinn's wife, Patricia, who spoke frequently during the meeting, questioned whether the meeting of commissioners Edward Guild and DeSantis, with Town Counsel Henderson, after the April 13 meeting had been an "illegal, unposted meeting."

She also suggested the load on the plant might be alleviated "if you take off some of the houses on Pond Street."

DeSantis said all the houses tied in to the present system only produce about a 30,000 gallon flow, whereas the high school may produce over a 10,000 gallon flow.

Tough Love: parents take a stand

By Moira McCarthy

[Ed. note: Although Tough Love is not an anonymous group, the names in the personal accounts have been changed to keep the experience private.]

Angela's stepson tried to kill his father.

Mary's son has run away from home three times. "We've been frantic," she said. "We know he's been out on the streets doing drugs. He's been stealing food from the house. And my daughter wouldn't come home from school out of fear."

Elaine's daughter has been living with Mary's son, and sharing in his activities.

And Julie and Steve's son has been battling the needle for ten years. When he was 14 he was introduced to drugs by a teacher who sexually molested him. He's been on and off and on again with heroin ever since then.

"Without Tough Love," Julie said. "we'd be right in the middle of it. But now we know he has to do it on his own."

Tough Love is a parental help group that meets to give parents a chance to share, discuss and understand the problems their children are putting them through.

For anyone that knows the frustration, confusion, and helplessness of raising a troubled child, the idea of having someone to share your troubles and learn how to deal with them is a comfort.

Problems can range from a child who never cleans up a mess, to one who's addicted to drugs, to a child involved in a little bit of everything.

"What the children do, whether it be drugs, alcohol, or anything else, doesn't make a difference," longtime Tough Love member Peggy Duffy said. "The question is: What is their behavior? When there's a radical change in attitude or behavior, that's when help is needed. You've got to stop the behavior, and then solve the problem."

What Tough Love does, according to the parents involved, is give them the strength to do what may seem cruel and tough to their children, but what "has to be done."

Peggy had to leave her son in jail for the weekend, and only bail him out when he agreed to go to a detox center. "It was hard to leave him there, but he had to learn," she said.

Mary had to stop hunting for her son to make sure he was alright. And she had to stop begging him to come home.

"I want him to do it on his own," she said. "I want him to want to come home. That's the way it has to be, but it hasn't been easy."

And that's where Tough Love comes in. "Tough Love," Mike said, "is like a shot in the arm. We come every week to get our booster."

The weekly meetings take on a standard form. The Tough Love members start out in small groups, where they discuss the happenings of the past week.

Then they get in one large group to share success stories, positive happenings of any kind. "Spirit boosters," one member calls them.

And after a reading from the Tough Love manual ("Our bible," Peggy says) they each set what is called a "bottom line" for the next week.

These, Peggy explained, are some kind of small step the parents must stick to for a week. "If these rules are broken, you must have a consequence that you can enforce. And the bottom line is, you must enforce."

The rules are usually written up in a contract, and signed by both parents and the child. It can deal with anything from a curfew time, to room cleaning, to keeping drugs out of the house.

"It's important to start out small," Peggy added. "You can't turn things around overnight. It took those kids a long time to get that rotten so it will take a long time for them to get better.

"Tough Love gives us permission to do what we have to do, to make our lives and their lives better. It teaches us that guilt and blame don't help anything."

Peggy said that she doesn't feel guilty about listening in on phone conversations. "You have a right to listen in on the phone. It's your phone."

And she doesn't feel guilty about calling the police if she knows her son is up to something. "(Scituate Police) Chief Walter Driscoll is Tough Love. He supports us 100 percent."

Mary said although children can make parents feel guilty about checking up on their plans, it is actually a wise thing to do because it often helps other parents find out what their children are up to.

"When the problem starts, you don't want to hear it," Peggy said. "It hurts, but it doesn't just go away. You've got to hear about it and deal with it. You've got to have self discipline, be consistent, and call another Tough Lover if you feel you're getting too soft."

Elaine said one of the main lessons she's learned from Tough Love is, "Don't react, but respond. If you usually scream, be quiet. If you're usually quiet, then scream. Change your buttons so your child doesn't know which one to push.

"Since I started Tough Love, I'm not the same person. My daughter used to wrap me around her finger, but not anymore. Anytime I feel soft, Tough Love is there."

There is definitely a need for Tough Love in Massachusetts. The Scituate-Cohasset Chapter, which was formed this month, is the 29th to open in Massachusetts. Its first meeting drew a crowd of over 50 parents.

"I used to think, 'this doesn't happen to nice families from nice towns,' " a Hingham woman said, "but we've found in Tough Love it crosses all religious and socio-economic groups.

"We have to come out and talk about it. People in Hingham don't have problems. Just me."

Peggy pointed out that Tough Love helps the community, as well as the parents.

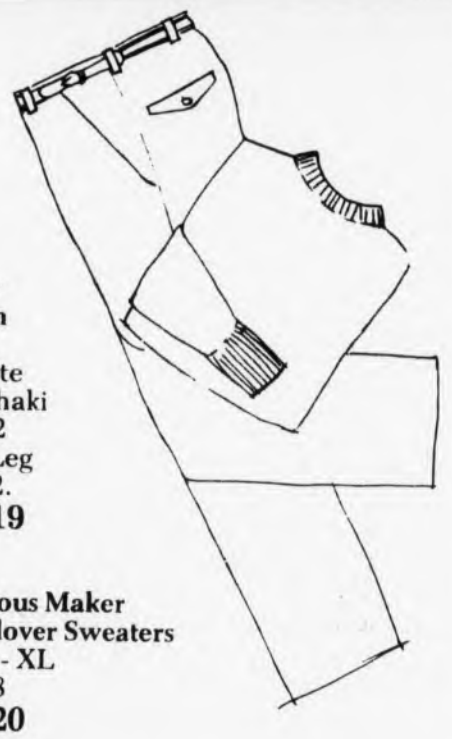
"If my son is a problem to me, then he is a problem to the community. Then, I need the community's help, and they need mine. That's why we're here," she said.

Tough Love groups meet Monday evenings at Saint Mary's Church, Hanover, and on Wednesday evenings at Saint Luke's Church, Scituate. Both begin at 7:30, and many Tough Lovers attend both.

"Sometimes one shot in the arm just isn't enough," Mike said.

"Our kids are always getting together and discussing us, now we're getting together and discussing them," Mary said. "We find the network works."

Lily Pond okay



Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulous reported test results of Lily Pond show no "volatile organisms." These tests were taken when health officials investigated a site behind Norfolk Conveyor Company for possible hazardous waste dumping and after a fuel oil tank spill. Tests were taken to determine the spill's effect on Lily Pond, the town's main drinking and water supply.

Eliopoulous said more followup studies will be taken. Fire Chief Martin Dooley said the spill happened two months ago and "it was of a minor nature. The oil was not highly flammable," he said.

The Casey family opens Cedar Street kennel

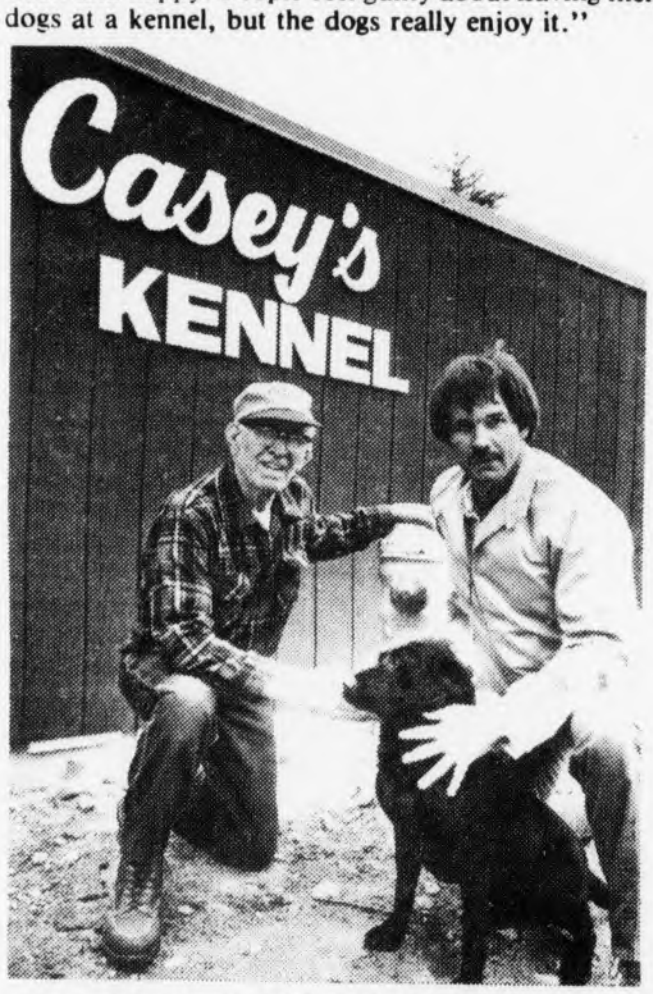
By Moira McCarthy

Some Cohasset families may not be for the dogs, but the Casey family is.

And it's paying off.

Patrick, the son, has just opened a kennel on Cedar Street, and Steve and Mary, the parents, are always there to help.

"We've always been interested in dogs," Steve said with a thick Irish brogue. "County Kerry in Ireland, where I'm from, is famed for having the finest greyhounds in the world.



"We've owned pets, show dogs, hunting dogs and field trial dogs. We've owned some real number one dogs," he said.

Patrick grew up working with his family's dogs, and that was training enough to enable him to open his own kennel.

"When you have from 40 to 50 of your own dogs to raise, train and take care of, it's pretty easy to learn about dogs," he said.

What Patrick learned is tender loving care.

"A visit to our kennel actually ends up being a vacation for a dog...we give them attention, and keep them clean and happy. People feel guilty about leaving their dogs at a kennel, but the dogs really enjoy it."

Dogs and cats get TLC at Casey's Kennel. Steve and Patrick Casey with well behaved friend.

Mary said when a dog seems lonely or homesick, she usually goes in and talks to them. "That soothes them, and makes them feel at home."

"There are some nervous little ones," Patrick said, "so I pick them up and walk around with them for a while. Every dog is different, like a person. We get to know them personally. We give them all the individual attention that we can."

Diet plans for the dogs are strictly top-of-the-line. "We give them the best dog food money can buy," Patrick said. "And if they won't eat that we find something they will."

He added that finding something sometimes means feeding the dog food from his own cabinet. "Just so long as they're happy."

The kennel is spanking clean and almost totally cement and metal so it won't burn. It houses 60 dogs and 12 cats.

Each dog has his own indoor sleeping area, complete with a little sleeping bench and a flap leading to his own private outdoor area.

A lot of dog talk goes on in the dogs' area, but it all seems friendly, almost gossippy. "They see the other dogs and get to know them," Steve said.

The indoor area is equipped with both heat and air conditioning, and a stereo system will be installed.

And since their opening four weeks ago, the Caseys are thinking of more plans.

Debbie Miller, a close friend of the family, is attending grooming school and will man a complete grooming room which is being installed.

A fenced outdoor running area has been installed and expansions are now under discussion.

"The dogs leave here healthy and good looking," Patrick said.

Dogs are allowed to bring along any special toys or blankets they may want to have. "One dog brought along an oriental rug to lie on," Mary said laughing.

The only requirements a boarder needs is a veterinarian certificate from within the past year.

"The best part of bringing your dog to a kennel is the safety," Patrick said. "It's safer than leaving them at a friend's house, because we're watching them professionally.

Besides, in this dog's world, we all deserve a vacation now and then.

Art for Heart Show

South Shore artists will be participating at the Art for Heart Show to be held Sunday, May 1 from 3 to 7 p.m.

The event, to benefit the Heart Fund, will be at the National Fire Prevention Association's headquarters in Battery March Park, Willard Street, Quincy.

The work of the 16 artists will be exhibited for sale, prices from $60 to $10,000. Also attending will be award recipient photographers Stan Grosfeld of the Boston Globe and Bill Greene of the Patriot Ledger.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

At several parties we've been to lately, it seems the men are either talking of golf or fishing. As I don't know of any recipes to link with golfing, I thought a few ideas on what to do with the day's catch might be in order. Fried, boiled or baked; chowdered, steamed or smoked, fresh water and ocean fish are delicious and wholesome. Our early settlers found fish contributed valuable elements to the diet, offsetting the monotonous and unhealthful fare of corn bread, molasses and saltpork found on almost every table of the Pilgrim families. Their fish was broiled on a gridiron over the coals, steamed, stewed or boiled in iron kettles; fried in long-handled iron skillets resting on legs in the coals or baked in brick fireplace ovens. Their January Haddock Pie must have been awfully good and goes like this:

3 lbs. dressed haddock
1 onion
4 c. milk
1 T flour
1 T butter
1 c. cracker crumbs
Salt and pepper

Boil fish and onion together in small quantity of water. When done, mash onion and fish together and place in a baking dish. Add salt and pepper to taste. Scald milk and thicken with flour dissolved in cold water. Pour thickened milk over fish, cover liberally with butter and cracker crumbs. Bake to a golden brown at 350 degrees for 30 min.

* * *

One conversation I overheard from our modern-day fishermen was what to do with the bluefish they catch. If you've ever had bluefish, you know it has a very strong flavor which is best disguised with some sort of sauce. Here is how Barbara and Dick Pearson prepare their bluefish so that it doesn't taste fishy or oily:

CHARCOAL BROILED BLUEFISH

Put on grille when charcoal is grey-ashed a filet of bluefish. Spread large piece aluminum foil and place fish in center. Pour over fish:

1/4 c. lemon juice
1/4 c. white wine
Salt and pepper

Wrap tightly in foil. Cook about 10 min. on each side. Last few minutes, open foil to brown lightly.

Mary Sullivan tells of many Saturday evenings spent playing cards with friends, each taking turns hostessing the little group. One of their favorite snacks, delicious and very easy, was

CRABMEAT DREAMS

8 oz. crabmeat, cooked and flaked
1/2 lb. cheddar cheese, grated
1 pimiento, chopped
1 small onion, minced
1 small green pepper, chopped
1/2 c. milk
1 can tomato soup

In the top of double boiler combine all ingredients and cook until cheese is melted and sauce is smooth and creamy. Serve piping hot over toasted muffin halves. Serves 4.

Catching a fish is the fun part. Dressing it is another matter, taking a great deal of skill and time. Lucky the housewife, who has the day's catch presented to her nicely dressed and wrapped tightly in a double layer of Saran. Then, if it is to be enjoyed in the next day or two, it may be kept in the refrigerator. If the fish is to be frozen, enclose in heavy duty foil, or package in a freezer bag. For those of us whose husband doesn't know one end of a fishing pole from the other, we sometimes resort to opening a can of tuna fish for dishes such as this

INDIVIDUAL TUNA PUFFS

1½ c. thick cream sauce
3 eggs, separated
1/2 c. mushrooms, sliced and sauteed
1 c. freshly grated American cheese
1 can tuna, drained and flaked
Salt and cayenne

Prepare a thick cream sauce and fold in beaten egg yolks, sauteed mushrooms, cheese and tuna. Season with salt and cayenne. Fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Bake in four individual casseroles about 45 min. in 325 degree oven.

As I write this column, I recall hearing over the radio that we've had seven rainy weekends in a row and so, even the newest of South Shore newcomers is familiar with our nor'easters by now, but did they know, that after such a storm, our beaches often are dotted with sea clams washed up by the stormy seas? If you can find any of these treasures at low tide, you'll find they're just the thing for making the Pearson's

CLAM OR QUAHOAG FRITTERS

Dick writes: "No need to steam clams or quahoags. Just shuck raw, saving water to add to milk."

1 egg, slightly beaten
1/2 c. milk and 1/2 c. clam water
2 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. salt
1½ c. flour
1 c. ground clams or quahoags

Mix all ingredients well. Drop by spoonfuls in hot, deep fat 'til golden brown.

☐Martha Equi called last week to report the birth of her daughter, Maureen Elizabeth. Maureen was born on March 21 at St. Margaret's Hospital and joins her brother Mike (eight years-old), sister Meredith (five years--old) and brother Mark (two years-old). With grandparents living out of state Martha can be rated one of Cohasset's busiest Moms...am surprised she had time to chat.

☐Heard one man's solution as to what to do with the many bottles that he collects each week since the bottle bill went into effect. "I give them to my paperboy instead of a tip." Everyone makes out on that deal, I get rid of my bottles and the paper boy makes a lot more in tips per week than he used to." Good idea!

☐Kevin Quilty, Kevin Leary and Jeff O'Neill are all in Europe this week, playing hockey for the U.S.A. team. And Mia Graham is in Paris visiting relatives (wonder if she's going to come back with a "Paris Original" for the prom).

☐Bob Walls gets this week's entertainer of the town award. He certainly can put on a show, anything from announcing to dancing to telling jokes (does good imitations, too).

Teacher's Ride-A-Bike this Sunday

The Cohasset Teachers Association will sponsor the 12th Annual Ride-A-Bike from 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday, May 1. This is a state-wide effort to raise funds to help the 180,000 retarded citizens through the work of the Mass. Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC) and its local affiliates.

All ages are welcome to participate either by riding, sponsoring a rider, or helping man checkpoints on the day of the ride.

Riders solicit sponsors from within the community who pledge a predetermined amount of money per mile. After the ride, the contributions are collected by the participants from their sponsors.

Organized by the Massachusetts Teachers Association, the Ride-A-Bike has raised over $1.9 million since it began in 1972. Money raised through the Ride-A-Bike allows MARC to continue its many advocacy services for the Commonwealth's mentally retarded children and adults. Riders are needed more than ever during this time of severe funding cutbacks in programs and services for the mentally retarded.

Interested riders may obtain forms from Mr. Plante, Cohasset High School; Mr. Becker, Deer Hill School; or Mrs. Tewksbury, Osgood School.

No. 1 Checkpoint—Atlantic Ave. at Margin St. Go all the way down Atlantic Ave. by Sandy Beach to Nichols Road.

No. 2 Checkpoint—Atlantic Ave. at Nichols Road (Sandy Beach) — Young riders turn left and go down Nichols Road — at the corner of Nichols Road and Jerusalem.

No. 2½ Checkpoint—Corner of Nichols Road and Jerusalem Road — turn left and go down Jerusalem Road to the Town Hall for a four mile route, or, older riders — from No. 2 Checkpoint, continue down Atlantic Ave. to Jerusalem Road.

No. 3 Checkpoint—Atlantic Ave. and Jerusalem Road. Continue down Jerusalem Road to Forest Ave. (Black Rock Beach).

No. 4 checkpoint—Jerusalem Road and Forest Ave. at Black Rock Beach — Turn left up Forest Ave. to North Main St.

No. 5 Checkpoint—Forest Ave. at North Main St. — Turn left at North Main St. and ride back to the Town Hall for the eight mile finish.

Refreshments will be served at the Town Hall.

Riders may be sponsored for any amount per mile, or a donation of any amount would be appreciated.

Riders should bring their registration form to the Town Hall to begin the ride at 1 p.m. May 1. When they complete the ride, the final checker will sign verifying the number of miles completed. The checker retains the original copy.

Checks should be made payable to MARC Ride-A-Bike.

For further information, please contact Pat or Maria Plante (coordinators) — 383-9263.

Obituary

Thomas Gilman Churchill Sr.

Thomas Gilman Churchill Sr., 96, a retired investment sales representative, died April 23 in the Queen Anne Nursing Home in Hingham after suffering a stroke.

Born in Plymouth, he lived in Cohasset until three months ago when he moved to the nursing home in Hingham. He was a 1905 graduate of the Stone School in Boston and attended Harvard College for two years with the class of 1909.

He began his career at the Bonbright Co. of Boston in 1915 and was later employed at the Arthur Perry & Co. of Boston and at F.S. Moseley & Co. in Boston from which he retired in 1971.

Churchill was a director of the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank in Cohasset from 1923 to 1971 and was a vice president there during several of those years. He had also served on the Cohasset Finance Committee for six years.

He was appointed a Cohasset substitute selectman in 1945.

He was a longtime member of the Cohasset Yacht Club and the Cohasset Golf Club. He was a Mason for 75 years, a member of the Konahassett Masonic Lodge in Cohasset.

Husband of the late Barbara (Whittemore) Churchill, he leaves a daughter, Phyllis Tenney of Castine, Maine; a son, Thomas Gilman Churchill Jr. of Cohasset; five grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

A memorial service was conducted Tuesday in the First Parish Unitarian Church in Cohasset. Burial was private.

Donations may be made to the First Parish Church in Cohasset.

Cable TV could cause some exciting school changes

By Moira McCarthy

The Cohasset school system can look forward to some exciting changes when cable TV comes into town in March 1984.

In a meeting between the school committee, American Cablesystems representatives, and Audio Visual Director, Dr. John Packard, some new ideas were discussed.

"We want (to use the cable system) to do things more efficiently, and to save programs that may have been cut out," school committee secretary Diana Kornet said. "Our main concern is to maintain our fine quality course offerings, and to salvage cut programs."

Some of the ideas to enhance already existing programs are:

— Sharing programs with other towns to cut costs. Because American Cablesystems is also servicing Scituate, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Milton, Quincy and Randolph, the towns will be able to split the price of certain educational programs and broadcast simultaneously to all the towns. The classes will also be able to interact through cable.

— Keeping a teacher available on video at homework time. By broadcasting a teacher into residential homes, children will be able to call in questions and have them explained on the air immediately.

— Interacting with businesses to teach vocational skills. By filming from a bank or an accounting office into the classroom, students will see their classwork utilized in the business world.

— Broadcasting committee meetings into residential homes. This would keep the town aware of what's going on, without residents having to physically go to meetings.

— Broadcasting a video community bulletin board. This would run 24 hours a day, and would keep the town informed on everything from snow cancellations to the school lunch menu.

— Broadcasting sports events. This would add excitement to all the high school games.

Packard, who prepared the report on cable TV's use in the schools, said "This is an informal discussion. There's more to be asked and discovered." He said cable TV was going to be an important asset to the school department, and should be examined carefully.

One of the first ways to do that, Packard said, would be to establish an Educational TV Council, and then begin an informal campaign "to get across the potentials of the system to teachers, students, parents and others."

He also said the council should keep regular communications with the school committee, American Cablesystems and the council's counterparts in other towns.

American Cablesystems Director of Programming Nancy McNeil said the company was willing to work in full cooperation with the schools.

"We are providing a distribution system for entertainment and services. "We also provide certain tools to assist in cable TV usage, such as a library teminal and assistance in tool usage," she said.

McNeil also said American Cablesystems would be willing to give the school the materials in September 1983 "because training will be needed (before cable is installed)."

The school committee was generally excited about the proposals.

"I've seen studios draw students into whole new careers," superintendent Eugene Crowell said.

"What we have here is a tool to get information," Paul Pratt Librarian Dick Hayes said. "We can link up to other libraries in other towns."

Student representative and junior class President John Repogle said he can see the excitement in the student body. "I can see the whole school going crazy over the idea already."

But Packard warned there was still quite a bit of work to be done and it will be up to the administrators, teachers and residents to do it.

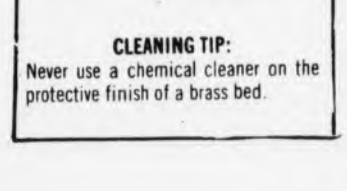
"If we want it, we have to work for it," he said.

Nursing Home Week

In observance of National Nursing Home Week the Ripley Road Nursing and Retirement Home will hold an open house the week of May 8-14. The public is invited anytime during the week. Refreshments will be served Wednesdays from 7-9 p.m.

Commuter Boat progress

Senator Allan McKinnon announced that substantial progress has been made toward securing docking space in Boston for commuter boat service.



McKinnon reported that efforts by the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction (ETOC) have culminated in a draft/lease agreement. The agreement provides critical dock space to commuter boat operators and would specifically make available space for Mass. Bay Commuter Service's "Gracious Lady."

Brass beds not only come in a variety of sizes, but they can fit into almost any decorating scheme. The traditional styles have ornate loops, scrolls and floral patterns. Simpler styles feature straight-lined posts and little ornamentation while contemporary designs incorporate slim square posts. Most sets include the headboard, footboard and frame. Genuine solid brass beds provide excellent durability and value. They are made from 70/30, copper/zinc alloy that is buffed with the natural grain of the raw brass. A clear baked on epoxy finish will provide a lifetime of lustre without polishing. All parts should be solid brass and attached with threaded steel rods that pass through the brass tubes and then capped.

Are you looking for that special ambience in your bedroom's decor? Bring your decorating ideas or problems to us, BOUND BROOK PAINT & HARDWARE here at 763 Country Way in N. Scituate. We enjoy the challenge of coming up with solutions to even the most difficult problems. We're open for your convenience Mon-Wed 8-6, Thurs & Fri 8-8:30, Sat 8-4 or phone 545-3624. Master Card, Visa welcomed.

CLEANING TIP:
Never use a chemical cleaner on the protective finish of a brass bed.

Dramatic Club to present 'Plaza Suite'

The Cohasset Dramatic Club's final show of its 62nd consecutive season will be Neil Simon's popular comedy "Plaza Suite." Set in 1960's New York, "Plaza Suite" actually is a program of three one-act plays all taking place in suite 719 of the Plaza Hotel.

Playwright Neil Simon was born in New York's Bronx in 1927. During the 1950's he became known as a writer for television shows, then in 1961 wrote his first Broadway play "Come Blow Your Horn." Success followed as Simon wrote a series of contemporary plays, including "Barefoot in the Park," "The Odd Couple," "Sweet Charity," and "The Star Spangled Girl," all proving to be hits on the New York stage.

"Plaza Suite" makes its debut on Cohasset's Town Hall stage this spring. In the original Broadway performance, George C.Scott and Maureen Stapleton played the leading roles in each of the play's separate acts.

Community theater presentations of "Plaza Suite" customarily cast different players in each of the three acts. Thus the Cohasset performances will see J. Arnold Nickerson and Barbara Elliot as Sam and Karen Nash, a couple celebrating their 23rd (or is it 24th?) wedding anniversary in the Plaza's Suite 719, while Suzanne Tilden plays the role of Jean McCormack, Sam's secretary.

The title of Act One is "Visitor From Mamaroneck."

The second act, titled "Visitor From Hollywood" will have Virginia Dowling as Muriel Tate, the former high school sweetheart and Eric Bogle as Jessie Kiplinger, famous Hollywood producer. The Plaza Hotel's waiter and bellhop will be played by Carter Hill and Gerald McNabb, respectively.

Act Three, titled "Visitor From Forest Hills," will see Gari Glennon and Bob Julian as Norma and Roy Hubley, worried parents of the bride-to-be (or not-to-be); Katie Miessner plays Mimsey Hubley, the youthful bride, and Eddie Fee the prospective groom, Borden Eisler.

Phyllis Mahon directs the Cohasset presentation of "Plaza Suite," Arthur Paquette is in charge of stage lighting, Carter Hill and Susan Harrington are the producers and Oliver Woodruff is stage manager.

Performances will be at the Cohasset Town Hall Thursday, May 12 to Saturday, May 14. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Tickets, available at the door on nights of performance, will be $3.50. On Thursday the 12th only, Senior Citizens are invited to attend at no charge, and students will be admitted for $1.

Selectmen briefs. . . .

TROIKA APPOINTMENTS

Selectman Chairman Mary Jane McArthur, acting advisory committee chairman Jim Lagrotteria and Town Moderator Bill Weeks are calling for applications to fill vacancies in six town boards. They are advisory committee (one vacancy), personnel board (two), capital budget committee (one), design review board (one), govt. study committee (two), and permanent bylaw committee (three). Those interested should call Weeks at 383-1775 or write to him at 130 Border St. The Troika will meet soon to fill the vacancies and the meeting will be publicly announced, Weeks said.

B&E ARREST

A sixteen year-old Hingham youth is appealing a Hingham District Court decision which sentenced him to custody of the Division of Youth Services and an order to pay $3,500 in restitution to a Cohasset man. Cohasset Police Prosecutor Brian Noonan said the youth was charged with breaking and entering in the nighttime and malicious destruction to property owned by Joseph Gray of Mendel Road Feb. 25. Two other adults were charged and their trials are scheduled for June. They are William Manns, 17, of 1 Forest Ave. and William McMahon, 17 of Scituate. Noonan said the juvenile is appealing to a six-man jury in Dedham District Court.

SUSPENSION OF FIREFIGHTER UPHELD

Selectmen upheld Fire Chief Martin Dooley's three-day suspension of a firefighter over sick leave. By a 4-1 vote selectmen endorsed Dooley's action when he suspended James Runey for abuse of sick leave. Dooley observed Runey fighting a fire and later traveling south on Route 3A in his own vehicle. Runey's pay was docked for three days and was not allowed compensation for an overtime firefighting detail. Selectman Cliff Mitman said he understood why Runey responded to a fire at the home of Selectman Mary Jane McArthur. But he said the town would be in jeopardy and would have been liable for extended disability payments if Runey injured himself while being treated for a pre-existing condition. He was out on sick leave with an infected knee.

TESTING

The SRA Achievement Tests will be administered to all children in Grades 1-6 throughout the week of May 2.

Reading Readiness Assessment Tests will also be given to all kindergarten children.

RIDE-A-BIKE

April 21, about 30-40 teachers gathered outside CHS to promote the May 1 Ride-A-Bike for retarded citizens, which the Cohasset Teacher's Association is sponsoring.

Association President Tom O'Neil dressed for the afternoon of fun according to Deer Hill teacher Joe Becker. O'Neil was dressed up in formal wear with tails, but wore sneakers! He offered two retarded youngsters a ride on a two-seater bicycle, while Pat Plante added color to the occasion dressed as "E.T."

Becker says youngsters are getting sponsors for donations toward mileage and "they have had a good response at the Deer Hill School." For more information, call Patrick Plante through the High School office, 383-6100, or at home, 383-9263.

NEW DISPLAYS OF ARTWORK

Art teacher Tom Lucas reports four new displays of art work are currently being exhibited in the corridors and display cases in Cohasset High School. Along the corridor display area, there is an exhibit of crayon drawings by junior high pupils illustrating scenes of "To and From and In School."

A group of black and white photos by high school photo students are on view in the show case outside of the art room.

An exciting exhibit of 3-D sculptures is in the main display case. This exhibit by junior and senior art classes includes samples of sculptured heads in full round and high relief, as well as low-relief metal plaques and wood constructions.

STATE HOUSE STUDENT GOVERNMENT DAY

Two Cohasset High School juniors, Trina Moore and Jenny Mitman, took part in the Student Government Day Program in the State House in Boston Friday, April 8. Trina was chosen as a member of the State Supreme Court, while Jenny served as an alternate judge.

Both girls were picked to represent their school in school-wide elections held in early November, 1982.

CHS Senior Class Play

Hold onto your hats, folks. It is once again time for the CHS Senior Class play. Showing May 5, 6 and 7 at 8 p.m. at the CHS auditorium, this year's production is bigger and better than ever before. So grab some tickets from your favorite CHS senior while you still can.

Chock full of gems, many never performed on the South Shore, this spirited review wells up out of a talented troupe of almost 100 seniors. There are songs, dances and dramas from such greats as "Chorus Line," "Hair," "Chicago," "Guys and Dolls," "Jesus Christ Superstar," and many others, as well as some surprises you will just have to see for yourself.

Directed by Scott Ketcham, Joanne Fichtner and Sandford Kravette, this show, like so many before it, is ably assisted by Grace Wilkins on costumes, Clark Young on lights and Jean Birmann on piano.

This is one Senior Class Play you will not want to miss. We only ask that you try to refrain from singing, dancing and shouting along with the cast, if you can.

Cohasset reading clinic

The Cohasset Reading Clinic will offer its annual six-week summer program for children, young adults and adults with reading, spelling and writing difficulties. This is open to all students in area towns.

The clinic will be held July 5 through August 11, at Cohasset High School.

It will be directed by Marcia Murphy, a Massachusetts General Hospital certified reading therapist. The faculty will consist of experienced teachers trained in the Orton-Gillingham approach and certified by Massachusetts General Hospital. Enrollment is limited.

A brochure is available upon request. For further information, contact Marcia Murphy at 383-0839.

Since then they have attended several workshop sessions in the State House.

The faculty coordinator of the Student Government Day Program in Cohasset is Edward Sheehan, chairman of the junior/senior high school social studies department.

CHS sports roundup . . .

By J.T. Ryan

BASEBALL

Danny Ainge of the Celtics isn't the only local sports affiliate to have been bitten in the last few weeks. The Cohasset High varsity baseball team feels they have been snake-bitten themselves, opening their season last week with four losses.

On opening day the Skippers couldn't contain a talented Hanover squad who broke out to an early lead on Cohasset pitcher Bob Meers. A few hits from senior Jack Maloney helped Cohasset to keep the final score, 8-5, respectable.

In the following two games, the Skippers dropped tough decisions to Middleboro and Hull. Their lack of hitting and consistent defensive play cost them on both occasions.

Game four of the season was against a powerful Duxbury team. Cohasset pitcher John Ryan didn't enjoy much success with the Green Dragons, as a few Skipper errors combined with his untimely free-passes enabled the Dragons to establish an insurmountable 9-0 lead in the first two innings.

Skipper bats heated up in the latter stages of the ballgame, yet too little too late as the Dragons roared to a 21-6 final score (it's too bad the Cohasset extra-point kicker missed his attempt after their only touchdown).

The Rec Report

At the first monthly meeting of the recreation commission after Town Meeting, election of commission officers were held. Richard Barrow was elected to continue his post as chairman, James Gallagher was elected to the post of vice-chairman, and Mary Muncey was elected secretary. Other members are Gerard Buckley, Alna Ekberg, Eugene Price and Nancy Sladen.

CURRENT PROGRAMS

Dog Obedience classes for beginners and advanced will begin Wednesday evening, May 4.

Aerobics class for the spring is just underway meeting Monday evenings from 6:45 p.m. to 7:45 p.m. at the Town Hall. Late registrations will be accepted for the eight weeks course.

Self-improvement classes for girls 8-10 will begin Tuesday, May 3 and 10-13 year-old girls will begin class Wednesday, May 4.

There are still a few openings in lampshade making class. If interested in making cut and pierced lampshades, call the recreation department office at 383-6791.

All other programs are currently filled.

Information regarding facility permits will be forthcoming in May. New permits will be issued by the recreation department beginning Monday, May 23. Days and times of issuance will be announced via local news media and posted in the Town Hall.

The recreation departmet will offer a Summer Day Camp program at Osgood School for children four to 12 years of age this summer. Registrations will be held during late June and the program will begin Tuesday, July 5, contining for seven weeks through Friday, August 19.

CHS sports roundup . . .

By Alana O'Brien

BOYS TENNIS

The CHS boys tennis team won their league opener with Hanover 3-2.

First singles player Shannon Collins defeated his opponent 6-3, 7-5.

The first doubles team of Bill Davenport and Chris Peachhell won their match 6-2, 6-3.

The second doubles team of Brian Ramsey and John Colocousis clutched the victory with a three set match win, 6-2, 6-7, 7-5.

In other league action the boys were defeated 4-1 by the Duxbury Dragons.

The lone Skipper winner was second singles player Paul Riley 5-7, 6-3, 6-7.

Cohasset's next home match is set for Thursday, April 28 vs. Rockland.

GIRLS TRACK

The CHS girls track team opened up its season with a league meet against Norwell.

Despite the efforts of senior Karen Eckberg and sophomore Kathleen Buckley, the Skipper girls were downed 95-23.

Results for the Skippers: 100—second place, K. Eckberg; 220—third place, C. Staunton; 880—second place, S. Trask, third place, K. Buckley; and in the mile, third place, K. Clinton.

Other Skipper winners were: Two mile—third place, P. Ellis; High jump—second place, K. Buckley and third place K. Eckberg. Shot—second place, T. Moore; discus—first place, K. Eckberg, third place, B. Riley and in the javelin—third place, S. Trask.

SOFTBALL

The CHS girls softball team holds onto a record of 2-2 two weeks into the season.

In their season opener at Hanover the Skippers defeated the Indians 11-2.

Standouts for Cohasset were senior captain Gia Barresi with three hits and sophomore Tara Stanford hitting in three runs with two hits.

Pitcher Caroline Zwicker did a fine job on the mound and at plate with three hits.

The Skippers' other victory was a 13-6 decision over Duxbury.

Sophomore shortstop Janet DiGirolamo had three hits with two RBI while catcher Gia Barresi had two hits with three RBI's.

At Middleboro, the Skippers lost a close 6-3 to the undefeated Sachems.

Cohasset took a 2-0 lead in the first two innings, however, Middleboro caught up in the 4th and 5th innings with three runs.

Junior third baseman Kim Wittet led the hitting for the Skippers with two singles and and RBI.

In other league action, the Hull pirates, a strong team in the league, defeated the Skippers 16-1 despite a great effort by senior captain Gia Barresi.

In non-league action, Cohasset defeated Sacred Heart of Kingston 9-6.

The Skippers will face E. Bridgewater, Norwell and Rockland this week.

BOYS TRACK

The CHS boys track team was defeated 95-50 by league opponent, Norwell.

Results for Cohasset : 220—second place, P. Leonard; 440—second place, G. Parziale and third, J. Reidy . 880—first place, M. Desantis with a time of 2:11.

In the mile—P. Johnson; two mile—third place, B. Shultz; low hurdles—first place, C. Mahoney and third, D. Bowen. High hurdles—first place, C. Mahoney; shot—third place, D. Bowen; javelin—third place, D. Bowen; high jump—tie between C. Mahoney and J. Ratterbury.

In the Pole vault—second place, B. Riley; T. jump—first place, M. Basmajian, third place, P. Harris; and in the 440 relay—Bowen, Leonard, Basmajian and Harris, time 48.3.

New rules issued on beach permits

It took only a few minutes last week to decide an issue which has been discussed and debated for weeks.

By a 4-0 vote, selectmen decided to curtail the issuance of guest permits for the beaches.

Selectmen have reviewed the revised set of rules and regulations governing the issuance of facility stickers for two months.

The former three-member board voted to continue the long-time practice of guest permits for out-of-towners who visit residents during the summer.

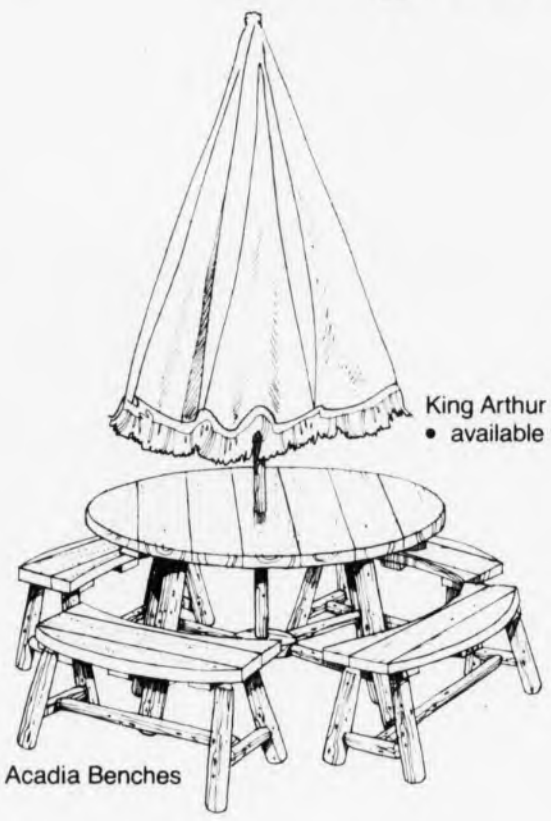
Selectman Frank England said new information had been obtained since that vote. It is now known that 198 guest permits were issued, rather than 48, which the previous board had been told.

Therefore, a reconsideration of the March 16 vote should be made, England suggested. The board agreed, and voted to stop the guest stickers.

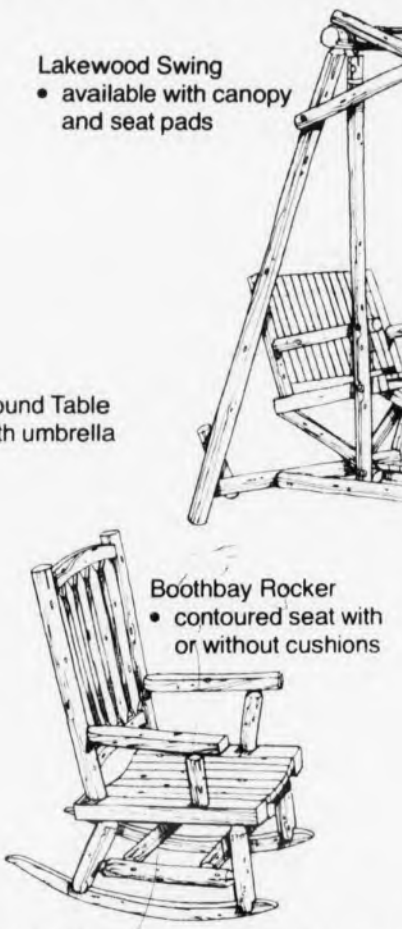
Recreation director John Worley, who will oversee the issuance of the stickers from his department this year, is opposed to the guest permits. He earlier said there is potential for abuse of the stickers used by out-of-town residents.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle, who abstained from the vote, maintained there is no abuse of the stickers. He also was not in favor of hiking the $2 price tag for the permits.

LIGHT CORNER by Nancy Dooley



Today, finding the proper lighting for a home is a task within itself. Well, here at the Flagstaff Lighting Showroom in Norwell we have a trained staff to assist you in selecting the proper lighting that you need, in a decorative as well as a functional standpoint.



Proper illumination is very important to the homeowner today. You can light up a dull corner by adding track lighting, or recessed lighting. Both come in a large variety of shapes, sizes, and colors. Our staff is trained to assist you in which particular fixture you would need to light up that certain dull area. Track lighting and recessed lighting are just a couple of ways to add light to the home.

At the Art Center . . .

Come travel with the South Shore Art Center and never go outside. The May exhibit entitled "Art Away" will feature works created by South Shore artists while vacationing in faraway places.

Opening May 6 and running through June 4, the works to be hung in the South Shore Art Center Gallery, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset, represent a cross-section of South Shore artists. The opening reception will be Friday, May 13 from 6-8 p.m.

Represented in the Show are works by Mary Good, Nancy Arnold, Mary Lizotte, Virginia Avery, Kay Calnan, Rachel Kennedy, Pat McCarthy, Rosalind Farbush, Anita Fireman, Betty Burke, Esther Antonelli and Ruth Ferrera.

The travels of these artists to such places as Florida, Block Island, Haiti and Mexico will be reflected in the works they created while on vacation.

Many of the names in "Art Away" are quickly recognizable to art patrons for many of these artists have shown in other South Shore Art Center exhibits. The show is open to the public, Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m. and Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

JURIED SHOWS DEADLINE

The South Shore Art Center announces its entry dates for the 28th Annual South Shore Arts Festival juried shows.

The festival, to be held on the Cohasset Common, July 1 through July 4 will have juried shows in painting, drawing, graphics, photography and sculpture (3D).

Entries are to be brought to the Center, 103 Ripley Road, Friday, June 10 from 4 to 8 p.m. and Saturday, June 11 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Works not accepted into the juried shows are to be picked up at the Center Friday, June 17 from noon to 4 p.m.

All works must be original and not previously exhibited in a South Shore Arts Festival. All paintings and photographs must be framed and wired for hanging. Sculpture must have a stand.

For further information, call the South Shore Art Center at 383-9548.

VATICAN COLLECTIONS

The Vatican Collections: The Papacy and Art — — an exhibit in the grand style of King Tut and Pompeii — —provides the most dramatic and intensive collection of works from the Vatican, the Vatican Library and St. Peter's Basilica.

The South Shore Art Center is offering a one-day excursion to the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City to tour this unique exhibit of some 237 objects which attempts to express the role of the Papacy and the Church in the development of Western art.

The one-day $54-round trip to New York Friday, June 10, leaves Cohasset at 6:30 a.m. and returns in the late evening. Since space is limited, advanced registration is mandetory.

The Vatican Collections spanning more than 25 Centuries of art represent work going as far back as the Fifth Century B.C. to work completed as current as 1946.

For a majority of the work in the collection this is the first time they have ever been viewed outside of Italy and the first time they have all benn viewed together under one roof.

The enormous undertaking of putting together this inspiring exhibit has been accomplished by a $3 million grant from Phillip Morris and the treasurers will travel from New York to the Art Institute of Chicago and the M.H. de Young Memorial Museum in San Francisco.

For registration and information call Ruth Rosenblatt at Cerel's Travel Center, Natick, 237-6190.

Angler's corner . . .

By Greg Derr

Foul weather has kept most fishing to a minimum in both fresh and salt water.

Saturday proved to be the only day when saltwater fishermen could get their boats out to catch cod. The areas off Ocean Bluff in Marshfield between the second spar and Farnum bell, also the area of the outer Boston Harbor near Hull Gut has yielded cod of up to 20 pounds, most fish being caught on either clams or large seaworms.

Warming water temperatures have made bass more active in freshwater, at least before the heavy cold rains of last weekend. With the rise in water levels, bass will feed on food swept into the ponds by rain. Try using live nightcrawlers or weighted rubber worms. Both should be fished near the bottom; the rubber worm dragged along the bottom sometimes resembles a small eel.

Long Pond in Plymouth and Little Pond were stocked a week ago Monday, so the fish are falling to all sorts of bait and tackle, including pink salmon eggs resting on the bottom. Local trout streams should be stocked with brookies by Friday. That done, they will move to deep slow water to conserve energy against the swift currents. Look for holding spots behind rocks and logs. Cast upstream, letting your fly or bait drift into the holding pool.

Remember, a license is needed to fish in fresh water and these can be bought at any town hall with the costs as follows: under 16, free; 16-65, $12.50; 65 and over, free; and handicapped, free.

Coho salmon parr have been stocked in the North River above the Indian Head Pond dam. The four-inch long parr will make their way to salt water to mature over the next 18 months. At least 1 percent will return to spawn as mature adults in the fall of 1984. The mature adult ranges in size from 4-20 pounds.

Ken Reback of Division of Marine Fisheries, who heads the Coho salmon project, has released 80,000 parr over the past week and advises fishermen to avoid using small hooks while fishing the area so as not to catch one by accident.

Just in case you're still getting your fishing tackle ready for spring, I ran into the "well prepared" angler this weekend who calls himself C. Frederick Spring of Norwell. He showed me all the right stuff to be used for a day of trout fishing and all of it should fit into your fishing vest. If you're neat.

☐ A knife for cleaning fish; the knife should also have a corkscrew (I'll explain later)
☐ flys, six boxes of them
☐ two pairs of scissors
☐ one pair of forceps
☐ toenail clippers
☐ a thermometer for checking water temperature
☐ scale for weighing fish
☐ a camera for taking photo of fish
☐ a stomach pump for seeing what the fish has eaten
☐ a note book to record data for future use
☐ fly floatant to ensure that dry fly floats
☐ mosquito repellent
☐ chap stick
☐ nail polish for repairing heads of flys
☐ a first aid kit that includes bandages, antiseptic and a snake bite kit
☐ a compass to blaze new and uncharted fishing holes
☐ a whistle in case the compass doesn't work
☐ a rain coat and hat
☐ extra sun glasses
☐ fingerless gloves
☐ a small fly tying kit in case the fish are hitting a fly he doesn't have ☐ photos of fish he caught last season
☐ a landing net for the big one

All this fits neatly into his vest weighing a mere 12 pounds. The corkscrew is for the wine bottle to be opened at the end of the day.

Fred takes his fishing seriously and does well. This isn't to say you need all of the above but "it couldn't hurt."

Oops, two weeks ago I incorrectly said that fishing licenses for anglers 65 to 70 were free. I should have said that they are half price...$6.25. Those 70 and over get free licenses.

For the eighth straight weekend it has rained, keeping most weekend anglers in their armchairs watching pro bowling or whatever. For the lucky ones able to fish during the week, warm weather has brought warm water fish to life. Pickerel are a prime candidate for pond fishing, as they usually are two to three weeks ahead of bass when it comes to taking a surface lure. Their meat is still firm from the winter freeze of the ponds.

Cranberry bog reservoirs offer prime pickerel picking. The fish can survive the rise and fall of water levels better than bass. Most bog ponds are filled with frogs and minnows which pickerel devour. To catch pickerel, try using a lure which initates mepps spinners or silver and gold spoons etc. Floating frog lures cast onto the pond should rest on the surface for a moment before being retrieved in short jerks.

Dennis Kowal of Cohasset took his daughter Jolie out cod fishing aboard his 17-foot boat, the Microwave, last week. They jigged about 50 pounds of small cod on the bottom two to three miles beyond Minot Light.

Dennis was using a rig that most commercial jiggers use; it consists of a 10 ounce sinker and five surgical rubber worms with 5/0 hooks.

The lead sinker is used below the five rubber worms strung on a heavy mono leader about nine inches apart; the sinker replaces costly chrome jigs which can catch on the bottom. Some anglers vary colors of the worms until they find one that produces.

Next week I'll try to give tips on catching spring runs of mackerel.

Blistering and peeling is by far the most common type of house paint failure. Flaking and cracking occur when the wood itself swells and shrinks due to wetting and drying out. Unless a paint coating has both good adhesion and some elastic quality, it will crack under the strain; and thus let more water in from outside — which magnifies the problem.

Please feel free to call us about any paint problems you may have with your house.

When you graduate to the Air Guard, your future's looking up.

And so is our country's. Because the professional men and women of the Air National Guard do more than provide the major portion of our national air defense. They provide aid in state and community emergencies as well.

Great benefits. Now and for your future.

By joining the Air Guard now, you'll be doing more than helping protect your community, state, and home town. You'll be helping yourself.

Because the Air Guard is a part-time military job, you'll have plenty of time to pursue a civilian career. Or further your education which we may help you pay for.

What's more, we'll provide valuable technical training. The kind of training you could probably use to get a good civilian job or to advance in your chosen career.

Of course, you'll also receive low-cost life insurance, a retirement plan, base exchange privileges, and more. All for your part-time work in the Air Guard.

If you're ready to move ahead with your future, learn valuable job skills and earn extra income, call your Air Guard recruiter today.

563-2150

You'll find out why we say, "In the Air Guard, the sky isn't the limit."

We Guard America's Skies.

The Satuit Bowlaway report

By Don Dwyer

Friday Afternoons Norfolk Conveyor bowling has the Eagles out in front by nine points over the Cowboys with only four weeks to go in the season. High Average to date have Jim Nagle holding a commanding lead with an outstanding 109.4, followed by Bob Barrows with 106.6, Al Wilson is third with 104.0, Delores Jenkins leading all the gals is next with 101.2, and Warren Edwardson has a 100.9. (Very nice bowling for once-a-week bowling.) Individual High Triples are Jim Nagle with 392, Bob Barrows and Al Wilson with 374 each, Brett Kyller, 368, Delores Jenkins 366, and Bob Nilsen 345. (I'd like to get a few of those super scores myself.) High Singles have Jim Nagle first again with 164, followed by Delores Jenkins and Bob Roth with 152 each, Bob Nilsen 143, and Al Wilson 139. (These bowling "Conveyors" are good, aren't they?)

The Sunday Night Mixed Doubles reports the following scores, and scores they are!. Class leaders have Jr. Torrey leading all with an outer space 125.5, followed by B's leader Grey Curtis with 108.2. C Class leader has Chet Sunnerberg rolling 101.8, and Kevin O'Connell had D's Class captured with 98.0. Pat Torry leads all the gals rolling a super 106.5. Class B has Fran Dorr out in front holding a 98.2 average. Lil Westinton is Class C's leader rolling a 92.4, followed by Ann Torrey, the Class D leader with 85.1. (Sunday Night sure does agree with these nice people.) Individual scores and I mean scores, have Jr. Torrey with a High Single of 186 and High Triple of 448. Ray Riddle with 178 and 411, and Pete Mitton with a Single of 176, rounding up these unbelievable scores has President Randy Ellis with a Triple of 386. On the other side of the ledger Pat Torrey leads all the gals with a High Single of 158 and High Triple with 355. Carol Castagnetti has the High Three for the Sunday Nighters rolling a 367, and a High Single of 142 tied with Karen Mitton. Pat Sunnerberg has the third High Triple rolling 341. (Are these people using "cannonballs" or bowling balls? Wow!)

Thursday Mornings Coffee and Donut League with only three weeks to go has the Sankas leading the Yubans by six points. (This could be a hummer to the end.) The High Average race if still undecided with Marie Merritt holding first with 99.3, and Priscilla Sindone a close second holding 98.8. (This race is going to be a good one.) Marie also had the High Single 120 and High Three 326 for the week. Betty Johndrow and Priscilla Sindone had three strikes each in last week's highlights. Dot Bennett holds the League's High Single with 141 and Priscilla High Triple with 349. (Hats off to all who have made Thursday Mornings such a super league, and we at the Bowlaway thank you all.)

Tuesday Mornings Ivy League with one week to go has the Sapphires leading the Diamonds by four points. (A rolloff between the two for the championship should be very interesting.) These gals have broken the Bowlaway's record for double strikes with 54, and they are not done yet. (A little birdie said with the money these gals have won they will be lucky at the banquet to get a hot dog with no roll. High single for the Ivy League is held by Pat Torrey with a classy 156 and Kip Ahearn the High Triple with a super 391. Pat also has High Average rolling a league record of 110.4, followed by another record in second place Sandy Hartley with 108.0. (Last week Sandy had 14 spares in her three strings of bowling, just something else!) Priscilla Shea holds third High Average rolling 103.4 and Linda Zimmer is next with 103.2. Last week's great Highlights were Sandy Hartley's 363, Pat Torrey, 330; Priscilla Shea, 322; Marie Merritt, 315; Pearl Levanchy, 311; Peg Barton and Mary Flaherty, 310; Jo Donahue, 308; Charlene Ketterer, 307; and Priscilla Sindone, 303. (The way these gals have scored this season you have to get a computer to take care of the computer.)

Our last notes for the week are that we would like you to join one of our summer leagues that the Bowlaway ofers. Most of our leagues have money prizes with everyone a chance to win something each week. So, come on down and enjoy the fun. All teams are handicapped, even for everyone. We have the following for you:

Tuesday morning and night ladies.

Wednesday night mixed doubles (a wonderful family night.)

Thursday night men's for all the gold.

Call us for any information. Hope to see you this summer.

Lawmakers differ on Prop 2½ change

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and state Sen. Allan McKinnon have mixed reactions to proposed legislation allowing 11 communities to cut less than the current Prop. 2½ law requires.

These communities are Boston, Brockton, Cambridge, Chelsea, Greenfield, Lynn, Pittsfield, Quincy, Revere, Somerville and Worcester.

McKinnon said under Prop. 2½ communities must cut the total tax appropriation by 15 percent annually until a community's total valuation reaches 2½ percent of full market value.

In each of these 11 communities 15 percent has been cut the past two years. The new legislation would allow the communities to cut only 7½ percent for the next two years, if approved by a city council or town meeting vote.

The legislation passed both the House and Senate and is strongly supported by Gov. Michael Dukakis. Tuesday, the legislation was up for a reconsideration vote by the House.

Murray played a key role in preserving the original Prop. 2½ guidelines during debate last week. She offered an amendment to a nonbinding resolution supporting Dukakis' local aid package.

The resolution is a prelude to a vote on the local aid package which calls for $157.8 million in extra aid.

Murray's amendment, which passed on a 73-70 margin, but later was reconsidered and defeated, required legislators to restore the Prop. 2½ language and require a ballot vote of any override.

"The voters voted for Prop. 2½. I did not support it but I have said all along if my district voted for it, I would do my best to keep Prop. 2½ in place.

"Eleven communities have not complied with what voters have said. I understand Brookline and Cambridge. They voted no. The other nine did not.

"It is an insult to the voters of the Commonwealth and it betrays the voters. I feel the governor is betraying the voters because he is committed to special interests and that is why he is behind this heavy lobbying effort.

"House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Michael Creedon said Hingham and Cohasset are so wealthy they would not need the extra local aid money but I will fight every inch of the way for that," Murray said.

Murray said it has been polite "arm twisting" but she has never seen such an intense lobbying effort, "even bringing the lieutenant governor into this."

MCKINNON STANCE

McKinnon said Prop. 2½ was passed initially as broad legislation. "At times there is a need for adjustment."

"Contrary to what Barbara Anderson (leader of Citizens for Limited Taxation) says, this legislation does not gut Prop. 2½.

"Fifteen percent is a big chunk to cut out every year, especially when you are talking about the older cities in the Commonwealth. I think what is being asked for is reasonable."

When asked his opinion of whether city councils, town meeting or the voters by ballot should approve the changes, McKinnon said "City councils or town meeting are the appropriate vehicles to make the changes. They're the ones that are properly versed on the finances of the town. If the people are that dissatisfied, then they have a recourse of filing a petition to overrule a city council or a town meeting vote," said McKinnon.

McKinnon, a Democrat, represents Cohasset, Scituate, Weymouth, Duxbury, Hull, Hingham and Marshfield.

Murray, a Republican, represents Cohasset, Hull and Hingham.

If you knew the facts about leasing, you'd never buy a car again!
For some unknown reason, the many advantages of leasing a car versus buying one continues to be one of the best kept secrets in the automobile business. Furthermore, a longstanding misconception states that you have to own or be in a business to lease a car. Not true! Anyone can lease. And most people should.
Come in and let us prove to you that leasing is truly the intelligent alternative to buying a car.

Selectmen rescind appointments to Historic District Commission

By Mike Berger

The dust has settled somewhat, leaving two official members of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission.

Selectmen will appoint six full-time members and one alternative, Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said.

April 27, selectmen unanimously rescinded the March 2 vote which appointed Barbara Weisenfluh, Roland Williams, Catherine Young and Elizabeth Marchese to new three-year terms.

Chairman Wood, acknowledged he failed to consult the full commission before recommending appointees to selectmen. He said the letter submitted to selectmen was a mistake.

Peter Wood is still chairman of the Commission. His term and the term of Charles Wheelwright will expire in 1984.

The terms of Tom Atkinson, Elizabeth Stevenson, Barbara Weisenfluh and Roland Willimas have already expired but remain on the board until selectmen officially approve their replacements or reappoint them.

Selectman Frank England said the vote "has nothing to do with the members. We find the facts not to be as presented."

In an opening statement to the board Wood asked that the March 2 appointments be rescinded and the vacancies filled as soon as possible.

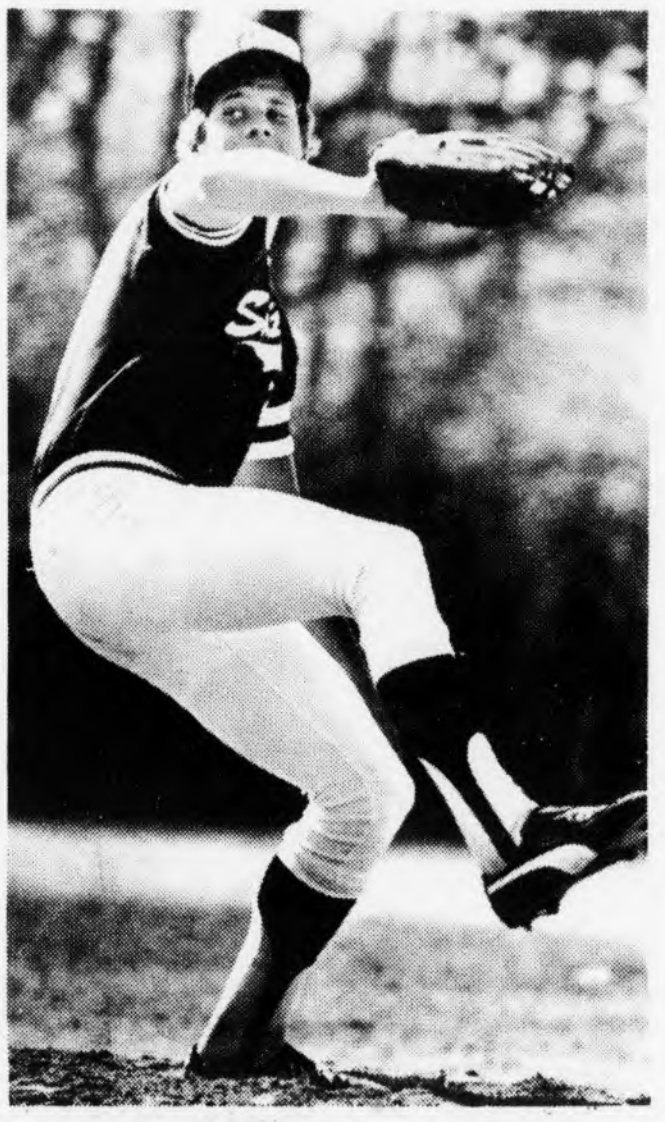
Dr. John Martin, one of the residents of the common, said rescinding the appointments was the "right move to make in restoring confidence in the commission."

The commission regulates exterior changes to homes surrounding Cohasset's historic common. The nine-member board was established to prevent residents from building fences or using paints that would disrupt the Colonial style of the common.

Besides not notifying the full board of the appointments made to selectmen, Wood has come under fire from some residents who claim the commission intimidated or disrespected residents requesting permits. Wood denied these charges.

Wood read a letter from Atty. Gordon Stevenson Jr. who complimented Wood for handling a meeting.

"I was getting more and more concerned over the last two or three weeks that there could be a phenomenal backlash against the bylaw in the event that the Martin situation was not handled carefully. I believe that you did an excellent job," Stevenson wrote.



Atkinson said the complaints against the commission has been a "very painful experience for common residents." But he believes there is a storm lining in that residents must care about one another as neighbors and to respect their feelings and rights.

Selectmen Chairman Mary Jane McArthur said the board would select new commission members based on new appointment procedure for town committees.

The appointment policy will apply to all standing committees, boards, advisory committees, study committees, ad hoc committees, councils, commissions and representatives to regional and state committees appointed by the board of selectmen.

The executive secretary will establish and maintain a resource file of all residents interested in becoming candidates for a committee. They will be updated annually.

Assessor Wilkin stays at the helm

By Patricia Anne Walsh

Brian Wilkin, chairman of the board of assessors, was re-elected without opposition at the April 9 town elections, even though the assessors have been strongly criticized for the failure of a recent attempt at revaluation.

The first thing you notice about Wilkin is his calm, confident voice.

He says that the newest revaluation is "right on schedule. We were about 12 percent done as of two weeks ago," Wilkin said.

Appraisal Consultants of New England, a firm recommended by Jane Malme, state director in charge of assessments for the department of revenue, completed work on Beechwood St., Aaron River Rd., Ledgewood, Brewster Rd., etc. Wilkin says most of the "Hillside" area (Oak St., Pleasant St., etc.) is finished.

"We have not seen figures yet," he said. "They won't produce figures until they have data on all the houses. Then they will start putting values on them."

He was asked to compare his job as assessor chairman to his position as former advisory board chairman.

"It is interesting, seeing a different side of town that you don't see from the advisory board. There are different facets to every job in town. There is a lot to it. You have to deal with people in a lot of different situations, particularly under statutory exemptions

Forum on alcohol spotlights a serious drinking problem

By Moira McCarthy

Last week's alcohol forum drew an audience of more than 200 parents and teenagers, and this pleased Health Coordinator Mike Gill.

"It restored my faith in human nature," he said after the forum.

"I was very pleased with the turnout. The parents are concerned and are willing to work. It's nice to see us working together to find a solution to the problem."

At the forum, parents and students questioned a panel of experts on causes and proposed solutions to Cohasset's teenage alcohol problem.

Many of these problems were brought to light by a recent survey that Gill gave to the Cohasset seventh, eight and ninth graders.

"That survey," Gill said, "was designed to make parents aware of the magnitude of the problem." Although most parents were shocked by the results of the survey, he said, "it was no surprise to the students at all. They know what's going on."

Panel member and child psychologist Dr. Allen Gruber said the problem is even more shocking than the survey revealed.

"Nary a weekend goes by when I'm not called into intensive care of an alcohol abuse case," he said.

"I wish I had a nickel for every time a parent has said this has to be the first time. And the child was drunk enough to be in intensive care."

School physician Dr. Robert Sceery agreed. "Every year we have one or two kids rushed to the hospital, or who have to be sat up with all night getting over a severe drunk."

Fran Drinkwater, an audience member who works in detox at the South Shore Hospital Emergency room said the number of children coming in with problems related to drinking is amazing.

"I can't think of a car accident or fight without alcohol involved, in my experience at South Shore. The kids are supposed to be staying over their friend's house, and they end up in E.R. The parents are always surprised."

Panel member and director of the South Shore Council on Alcoholism Bill Sphinx said the reason many parents aren't aware of their children's drinking habits is "A lot of parents have drinking problems themselves.

"And that plays a role with the kids. We are a drinking society. The media tells us it's a good time, but it doesn't tell us that there are prices to pay for abusing alcohol. Kids don't realize the pain involved."

Another panel member, Mark, learned of the pain the hard way.

"I started drinking in seventh grade, when I was eleven," he said. "The first drink came from peer pressure. Either you were chicken or you weren't.

Printing error

There was a printing error in the board of health annual report. The report indicated that 52 animal permits were issued. Only 12 were issued for 1982.

MEIPEC awarded contracts

MEIPEC, the Medical, Electronics and Plastics Engineering Company, was awarded several new contracts and moved to 760 C.J. Cushing Highway (3A) Cohasset, May 2.

The new contracts include two from Fortune 500 medical corporations for new products, two from Mass. based genetic and surgical companies and two from Connecticut for an intelligent terminal and hospital disposable.

Some of the new projects utilize MEIPEC's unique product audit techniques to optimize performance and cost effectiveness.

Roy Manns started MEIPEC in September, 1982.

Free blood pressure clinic

The Medi Mart Drug Store, 739 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, will hold a free blood pressure screening clinic for the public Friday, April 22 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The screening will be conducted by a nurse. Anyone with an elevated reading will be advised to see a physician.

The clinic is one of a series of health screenings held regularly by the Medi Mart Drug Stores.

Mussel permits issued

Selectmen voted to reissue mussel permits to commercial diggers with the following restrictions: All licenses will expire June 30; a limit of five licenses shall be issued on a first-come, first-serve basis; each commercial digger's limit will be 30 bushels per day; and the permit fee will be $20.

Selectmen are issuing licenses on a limited basis due to the uncertainty of the impact it will have on the overall mussel population of the harbor. The town is awaiting an analysis and recommendations from the State Division of Marine Fisheries before any long term plans are made for the issuance of commercial mussel permits.

Town Hall hours

Selectmen changed the present Town Hall business hours from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday to:

Monday through Wednesday — 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Thursday — 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

and

— 5:30 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Friday — 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The new hours are effective beginning Monday, May 16.

Lobster violation

State Fish and Game Warden, John Comeau of Weymouth, told the Mariner he had been out on a boat Friday pulling 51 lobster pots, which "did not have the proper markings" for the buoys which they were attached to. Twelve of the lobster pots belonged to Herbert Jason, and nine of the pots belonged to John Hut, Comeau said.

Comeau would not release the name of the individual Cohasset lobsterman who is suspected of being the offender. He said the case was still under investigation, and he "would be talking with another individual Monday." There was a similar case last summer.

Cohasset lobstermen say they have two time-honored, unwritten rules. One is a youth starting out in the business gets an "initiation" his first year. The second is a man caught taking lobsters from or fishing with another man's gear, usually finds his own lines cut that summer.

Board of health briefs . . .

The board of health is beginning to draft rules for "filled" or mounded septic systems.

In recent action they requested an owner to correct problems with a flooded apartment, listened to complaints of planning board member Robert Sturdy and approved installation of a portable toilet at the Cedar Street dump.

The Cedar Street "sanitary land fill" has not supplied a facility to be used by the workers employed there. For many years they have presumably left the sanitary land fill site which is under board of health jurisdiction, to answer "mother nature." After several "long distance telephone calls," Health Agent Elaine Eliopoulos said she had finally located a supplier, "Roto Rooter." The toilet will be cleaned at a cost of $50 monthly.

MOUNDED SEPTIC SYSTEMS

Eliopoulos said she would recommend that filled septic systems be dug in the primary and secondary fields to the depth of the perk, and for an additional 25 feet around the area, and then filled with suitable materials.

Board member Michael Bliss said he was opposed to filled systems because he was concerned about run-off into neighbors' properties. Eliopoulos said there was data available concerning percolation of germs and viruses, such as hepatitis and added she would research and supply Bliss with the data.

Contractor Wayne Sawchuck said he "could live with the restrictions" proposed by Eliopoulos, but advised the board they would increase costs to homeowners over present regulations. Sawchuck said he was opposed to banning such systems altogether because at most they would average four feet less in height, depending on groundwater.

DRAINAGE

Sawchuck also advised the board that he was concerned that drainage problems be properly attended, and suggested that new houses in Cohasset should be erected on a bed of stone and other drainage issues be addressed to prevent future problems in the town.

BASEMENT APARTMENT

Realtor Eugene Price met with the board regarding the basement apartment he owns at 86 Summer Street. He had already been warned by the board not to rent the apartment because of flooding conditions variously described as being six to 10 inches in depth on the floor.

Price advised the board that he had recently installed a family of four.

He said the most recent flooding had been caused by failure of the tidal gates which control the flow in the Elm St.-Summer St. meadow due to debris caught in the gates.

Sawchuck recommended that the gates should have a double screen interceptor larger than the gate opening. Joseph Ward has also discussed the problem with the sewer commissioners. According to Commissioner Edward Guild, he recommended replacing the present gates with lightweight magnesium ones which "work better." The flooding also affects the sewer plant.

Eliopoulos said she was concerned the flooding of the apartment might cause electrical problems.

The board advised Price to seek conservation and other permits, as necessary, to build a dike or whatever engineers suggest, and report back to the board. They urged him to hasten and remedy the situation, so they would not condemn the premises.

CEDARLEDGE VILLAGE

Planning board member Robert Sturdy appeared before the board voicing his concerns regarding Cedarledge Village, with 18 units, being developed on Cedar St. He discussed water levels, water on the road, the septic system, added runoff from "roofs, driveways and streets," and other of his concerns regarding permits for construction.

Eliopoulos acknowledged that water at the Cedar St. dump-Cedarledge properties reached an elevation of 57.3 feet maximum in March. She suggested Crossen, the developer, share the cost of engineering and a pipe to alleviate the situation. The engineering fees are expected to be $4,000 alone. She said, "Crossen had indicated he did not want to split the costs." The board will meet with Crossen.

Some town officials, including selectmen, have compared old versus newer contoured maps of the Cedar St. area. They say it appears there may be a dam "of at least six feet" causing water to be retained which was not there several years ago.

Forum on alcohol spotlights serious problem . . .

"After that, it's your choice." And Mark's choice was to drink. "Ninety-nine percent of the social functions I attended had something, if not everything to do with alcohol. There just wasn't a lot else to do.

"And the alcohol is available anywhere. I used to call up the taxi and have them buy it and deliver it for me. It's available to any kid.

"I didn't see drinking as a problem. A few of my friends died from it; I got arrested for drunk driving a few times and I totaled five cars. But I just didn't see drinking as the problem.

"It's easy to save up your problems for a weekend drunk and avoid dealing with them."

But, Mark added, when you put something off, you eventually have to deal with it. Mark stopped drinking when he was 22 years-old. Now he's 23 and a recovering alcoholic.

"I had totalled five cars and had no money left. I guess I realized that I'd rather be alive than dead.

"To get a mule's attention, Mark said, "you have to hit him hard with a two-by-four."

Gruber said one way to keep your children from having to go through what Mark did is to "zap them hard with the effects of alcohol. Kids don't understand that if you get enough alcohol in your body, you'll die."

He added that the Students Against Drunk Driving is a good first step.

"For the first time kids are saying, 'Hey, you're not supposed to drink and drive.' We have to support that."

Rev. Edward Atkinson of First Parish Unitarian Church, said he believes "telling people they're destroying themselves won't work alone. In fact, it may enhance the macho idea.

"The key factor is in believing in our children and in ourselves. Hug your kid and say 'I love you.' Start enjoying being a parent."

Many parents said the children need a place to go and things to do. Parent Chris Ford even suggested that the town buy the Cox estate for a recreation place.

But panel member and high school peer counselor Anne Marie Lagrotteria, a high school student, said she didn't know if more recreation was the answer.

"The kids drink before the functions we have now...I don't know what the answer is."

1982 Cohasset High graduate Holly Grant said, "The drinking age doesn't matter, you can get (booze) anyway...and a curfew doesn't matter...If you have to be in at 10, you can go out at seven and get drunk. I think that parent communication is the most important."

Sphinx agreed. "This is all of our problem, not just the kids. We have to figure out how we're going to communicate with our children."

Gill added, "We will continue working (to solve the problem). It's going to take a joint effort from families, schools and the entire community."

Assessor Wilkin stays . . .

and hardship exemptions. There is a lot to it. You have to deal with people in a lot of different situations, particularly under statutory exemptions and hardship exemptions. There are deadlines for tax bills, and statutory deadlines for all kinds of things the state sets up. You are always under the gun for something," he added.

Wilkin said serving on the advisory board meant there were fewer deadlines. Most deadlines there, concerned "a couple of town meetings a year. We deal more with people, and have to get work done to pass information onto other boards in town. There is always someone looking over our shoulders."

"Our job is changing more than any other board in town. There are continual changes in regulations. There were new laws passed in 1980 concerning the state department of revenue," Wilkin said.

"As soon as the new assessment is done we have to do an interim update, and two years from now another revaluation. We will have to do one every two years. You have to have a firm do it or do it yourself. We are a part-time board, and we don't have the time to do it. We have to maintain data on new construction and changes. Sales data will have to be continually updated. Land values have to be done," Wilkin said.

"My guess is the second revaluation may cost half of this one," said Wilkin. He said the present revaluation is costing the town $116,000.

"The last job in 1972 was not a very good job, and the town has suffered for it the last 10 years. There are a lot of inequities because a poor job was done," Wilkin said.

"If you make a correction one place, you may throw another area out of whack," he added.

Wilkin said the new revaluation will be "much better. We will be able to live with this one, and people will be able to realize that."

"The people who come in for abatements are intelligent. They do their work before they come in, and have comparable properties to complain about," he said.

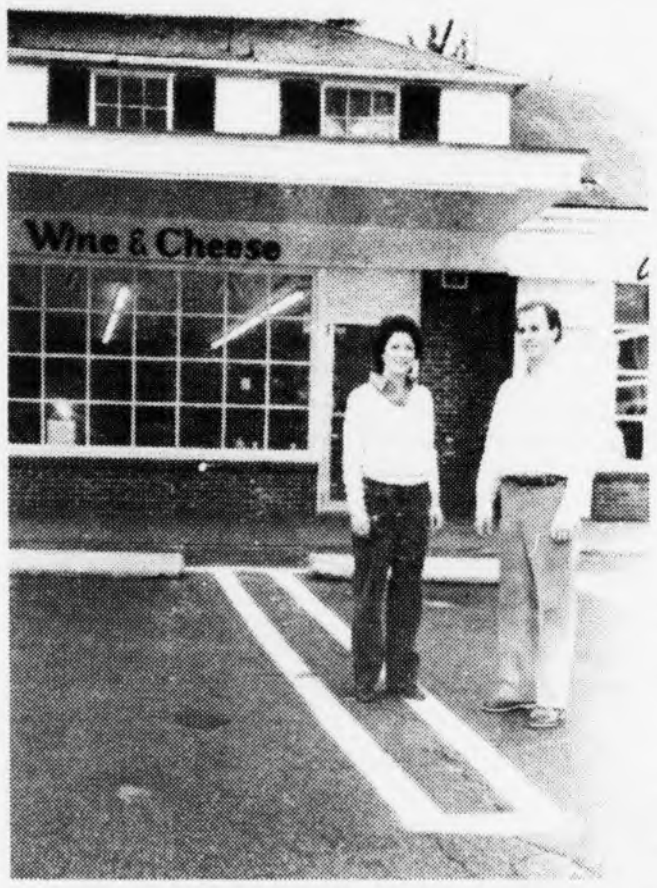
Sea 'N Cheese signs plaza lease



Zaven Dadekian, Cushing Plaza owner, and Richard and Linda Peters of Jerusalem Road, announced the signing of a long-term lease on a 1,200 sq. ft. store next to The Casual Male.

The store will feature fresh fish, prepared seafood entrees, domestic and imported cheese and gourmet condiments and coffee.

The store will known as Sea N' Cheese, and it opened Tuesday.

Renovations at the site are already underway and are being completed by Gregory Baccari, William Higgins (Harbor Mechanical Contractors) and Whitney Electric, Inc., all of Cohasset.

The store will provide outstanding quality products and personalized service. The Peters also plan to apply for a beer and wine license and will carry a variety of domestic and imported wines.

Linda and Richard Peters are ready to serve up "Sea N' Cheese" at Cushing Plaza.

"We are proud to have Rick and Linda join the Plaza," said Joseph Quinn of Cushing Plaza. "Fresh fish and cheese are items that many shoppers have been asking for."

Rick is a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University where he was an economics major while gaining six years of practical retail experience at Captain Marden's Seafood in Wellesley.

Linda is a graduate of Wheaton College where she was a German and Chinese major. While studying in Cologne, Germany, she had the opportunity to learn first hand about the wines and cheese of Germany and neighboring countries.

'Plaza Suite' to be performed May 12-14

By David Wadsworth

The Cohasset Dramatic Club finishes its 62nd consecutive season of Town Hall stage shows with three performances next week of Neil Simon's popular three-act comedy "Plaza Suite." The show will run from Thursday to Saturday, May 12 to 14. Curtain time is 8 p.m. and tickets are $3.50, available at the door on nights of performances.

Senior citizens are invited at no charge, and student tickets are discounted for Thursday's performance.

Founded in 1921, the Cohasset Dramatic Club gave its first full production at the Town Hall in that year, a comedy called "Nothing But The Truth." By the mid-1930's the Club had grown large enough to present three shows each year, a tradition that has been followed, with a few exceptions, ever since.

In years following, the Club has performed such well known plays as "Night of the Iguana," "Arsenic and Old Lace," "Harvey," "The Man Who Came To Dinner," "The Importance of Being Earnest" and "A Man For All Seasons."

"Plaza Suite" is another in the line of popular plays chosen and is often regarded as the best of playwright Simon's works.

Directing the Dramatic Club's Cohasset premiere of this modern comedy is Phyllis Mahon, a veteran of numerous Club productions both as a director and as an actress. With "Plaza Suite," Mahon returns to the Cohasset stage scene following a number of years away from New England.

☐There will be a new plaque on the wall of the Pratt Memorial Library, thanks to a gift from Mr. and Mrs. F. Gregg Bemis of Cohasset and Concord. A gift of $1,000 in memory of Evelyn B. Wood will be used by the library to purchase needed books, equipment and services approved by the trustees.

Evelyn Wood was the children's librarian and assistant librarian for 32 years, and was a deciding factor in making the Paul Pratt Library what it is today.

Anyone else who wishes to honor Wood may send a contribution to the Evelyn B. Wood Fund, care of the Library.

☐Heather Briggs completed recruit training at the U.S. Navy Recruit Training Command in Orlando, Florida, and was promoted to Seaman (E-3).

☐Cohasset's own marathon runner, Bill O'Brien, was in the spotlight once again last week. Anyone watching the Boston Marathon probably saw Bill, with his arms around his happy daughters, cross the finish line. Surely that made "Heartbreak Hill" worth the effort, as there is nothing like your own cheering section to inspire a tired runner.

☐The best buy in Cohasset this week has to be a cup of coffee at Curtis Compact...an eight-ounce cup for a nickel (and they even supply real cream).

☐Patrick Suhrbier is having a grand time in Germany, where he is visiting his relatives. Patrick went with his grandfather who is from Munich, so he's sure to see all points of interest through a "native" eye. While Patrick is busy taking in the sights his Mom and Dad are here in Cohasset, missing him a lot.

☐Herbert Crehan of Sohier Street was named an employee benefit consultant in the Boston office of William M. Mercer, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Marsh and McLennan Co., the world's largest property and casualty broker. Crehan joined Mercer from Hay Associates, where he was a partner in the Boston office.

☐There will be no mention of the "April Showers" in Cohasset...absolutely none!

☐JoAnn Fictner may be spotted around town looking a bit weary, with some scenery paint on her, but with a twinkle in her eye...she is pleased with her dancers and the progress that is being made by the senior class in their coming production of "Kaleidoscope." It will "air" next weekend (May 5-7); be sure to get tickets as they are going fast.

☐Last Friday Pat McCarthy turned 40 and there was a super party in his honor. Hosted by Anna and Mike Abbruzzese, it was a huge success. Joe and Kathy Becker put together a bulletin board that depicted Pat's life (all the highlights), Norbert Reardon gave a long speech decked out in an Army jacket, and Lynn Tilden made him a stained glass Irish Claddah ornament. Bob Tilden and Fred Delay, decked out in appropriate garb, presented the Birthday Boy with a flag and flagpole for his front yard. For the first time in his 40 year history, Pat was speechless!

☐Steve Sinopoli and Scott Fone are together again, this time on the Dean's List at Northeastern University. Steve and Scott were big buddies all through their high school careers (the "Dynamic Duo") and are graduating this June. Perhaps we'll see them in the business world, as they have another big interest in common — money.

'Class cutting an epidemic'

School Committee studies tardiness, absence policy

By Jane Lane

The school committee reviewed a proposed policy which will severely restrict the number of times a student may be tardy, absent or dismissed from class.

The policy, formulated by the faculty senate, was presented to the committee Monday night. The proposed policy will be posted at the library and town hall for public review and input.

The committee is scheduled to vote on the policy in a month.

Describing student tardiness and class "cutting" as an "epidemic," several instructors praised the proposed policy. The program would affect students in grades 7 — 12.

Kenneth Cisneros, a junior high school science teacher and a member of the faculty senate, said the present policy regarding excused absences, tardiness and early dismissals was examined. The members of the senate agreed the policy needed revision.

Cisneros reviewed the average number of grade 7 —12 students who were tardy one day in the months of September through April. He found the following: September, 35 tardy students; November, 48; December, 70; January, 70; February, unknown; March, 81; and April, 43. Cisneros also noted that on Monday, 85 students in grades 7 — 12 were tardy for class.

The highest rate was found in the 12th grade, where 15 percent of the students were listed as tardy on those selected eight days, he said.

The absenteeism rates were also highest in the senior class, he said, where an average of 13 percent were absent on those eight days.

The senate members reviewed policies in various communities, including Hingham, Duxbury, Marshfield and Weymouth. Cisneros said after Hingham developed a more stringent code, the tardiness and absenteeism rate declined. The policy is working well there, he told the school committee.

Cisneros said the present policy requires a teacher to keep a tardy student a minimum of 15 minutes after school, or for the amount of time the student was late. That becomes a complicated bookkeeping procedure, he said, and is ineffective in combating the problem.

The proposed policy states that any student missing fifteen minutes or more of a class period is considered absent, unless the student presents a pass from the nurse, an administrator or a teacher.

In grades 9 — 12, six absences per quarter course will lead to no credit in that course; 12 absences in a semester course will lead to no credit; and 24 absences in a year-long course, or six per term, will lead to no credit in that course.

Excused absences for medical reasons will not be counted in the total number of absences leading to no credit. But written evidence from a physician is required for a medical excuse.

Committee member John Langmaid said this requirement should be further defined to include the number of days a student is allowed to be sick before a physician's note is necessary.

This may cause undue medical expense for the parent of a child who is sick a couple of times per semester for something as simple as the flu, he said.

An appeals committee, consisting of an administrator, two of the students' present teachers and a guidance counselor, may decide that the absence can be excused from the total leading to no credit.

Students removed from school by parents for vacation trips will have these days counted against their total. This topic raised a flurry of discussion by committee members, teachers and parents.

Committee member Joe Nedrow noted that he, as a parent of two school children, was guilty of taking his youngsters out of school three days to visit Epcot Center in Florida. He disliked taking the children from their scheduled classes, but reasoned the vacation was a valid educational experience for his children.

Cisneros agreed this was a practice followed by many Cohasset parents. But where a trip to Epcot Center may be educational, what is to be said about the child who takes two school weeks off to go skiing in Colorado, he asked.

Patricia Wunschel, a high school home economics teacher and a member of the faculty senate, said she did not approve of parents taking children from their classes. "Reading a textbook on Miami Beach is not the same education I offer my students in my classroom," she said.

The attendance and tardiness policies proposed for the junior high school level, are not as severe as the senior high code, Cisneros explained. Because the problem is more prevalent in the senior high school, the policy should be more stringent there, he said.

In the junior high school level, eight absences in a term for a major course will result in an "F," 16 absences in a semester for a major course will result in an "F," and 32 absences in a year-long course will result in an "F" for the entire year's final grade.

Ann Marie League, a high school math teacher, told the school committee that the day before the spring vacation, she had four students from a total class of 18 attending her class. Only two were listed among those absent, she noted.

"They (the tardy and absent students) are making fun of us," the teacher told the committee. She said the revised policy "will absolutely" make a difference in lowering the tardy and absenteeism rate.

Communication

A minor brouhaha has erupted over some recent appointments to the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission and that calls for a few words on the subject of communication.

Without belaboring the issue, selectmen recently made some appointments to the commission, then changed their minds and made the appointments anew. The full membership of the commission apparently had not been made aware of the original appointments and, although that is not a deadly sin, it does underscore problems concerning how local government is run.

There is a reasonably large group of people in Cohasset who are willing to give of their time to serve on local committees. Unfortunately, some of these committees rarely meet, or never meet or meet in secret. And selectmen, the chief executives, are not always sure of what is going on.

For example, what is the Cemetery Site Committee up to? Or the Drainage Advisory Committee? Selectmen don't know.

Alas, there is a solution on the horizon and selectmen, with Chairman Mary Jane McArthur at the helm, have now decided the problems of communication and planning deserve attention. The honorable members of the board want to know what's going on.

We call attention to a new appointment policy established by selectmen and Executive Secretary Mark Lanza.

Lanza has told the Mariner he will enforce a new guideline from selectmen that all committees adhere to keeping up-to-date minutes and fulfill other requirements of the Open Meeting Law.

Selectmen have already had one planning session to discuss future long-range goals. That's fine but there should be more.

What is also needed are meetings with the Board of Health, the Sewer Commission, the Conservation Commission and the Planning Board to keep in touch.

Although many town committees are autonomous, selectmen as the town fathers must know what the boards are working toward, especially in the matter of developing a long range sewer and landfill plan.

For a long time Cohasset politics has produced secret meetings, incomplete minutes and poor government procedures.

We feel the tide is beginning to change and the key to it is communication. The leadership lies with the Executive Secretary and selectmen.

We also call attention to an important meeting Saturday at 9 a.m. at Town Hall. The appointing authority, also known as Troika, will meet to discuss appointments. This authority includes Moderator Bill Weeks, Acting Advisory Committee Chairman Jim Lagrotteria and Selectmen Chairman McArthur.

There are openings for several town committees such as the advisory committee, personnel board, capital budget, design review, government study and permanent bylaw committee.

We feel the test of government is the quality of those in office and the test of a committee is the quality of its weakest member.

Appointments are extremely important and its important for the town fathers to realize this.

Getting to the (a) church

By Claire McDonough

The Dragon and I were afraid we'd be late for our nephew's wedding. We arrived at what he thought was St. Mary's Church only to find that the sign in front said "St. Elizabeth's."

"I know there's a St. Mary of the Hills in Milton," I told him helpfully, "but I don't know where it is."

"Why didn't you say so?" he snarled as he got out of the car and went into a drugstore to seek directions.

Because I am more patient and reasonable than he, I avoided telling him that he hadn't asked me. Ten minutes later we were at St. Mary of the Hills, and since other wedding guests were still arriving, clearly we weren't late.

"Are you friends of the bride or the groom?" a tuxedo clad usher asked.

"The groom," I smiled, "but we'll sit in the back in case my husband starts coughing."

The church filled rapidly, and after a while the Dragon nudged me nervously.

"I don't recognize any of these people."

"Neither do I," I whispered. "It's funny. Your sister Dunna is always early." I smiled at the photographer who was snapping our picture.

"What do we do if it's the wrong wedding?" he asked.

"Easy. We wait till they bring in the mother of the groom. If it isn't your sister Anne, we leave. Meanwhile, try to look inconspicuous."

I smiled brilliantly at the mother of the groom, who looked lovely, and who smiled back. She was not Anne.

The mother of the bride, another total stranger, was ushered in. The bridal march began.

"I can't look," the Dragon whispered.

"You'll be more conspicuous if you don't." I smiled at the bride and her father. The photographer snapped another picture of us as they passed our pew.

The Dragon sighed. "For the rest of their married lives they'll be wondering who that couple is in the back of the church."

We said a quick prayer for the bride and groom and exited stealthily.

"We'll never find the wedding now," the Dragon said, "but we can be the first at the reception."

He drove to the Lantana. There were four or five weddings listed on the blackboard. None was "Sheehan-O'Connor."

"Let's try the Chateau," he suggested.

The Dragon tried to question the manager.

"What does your invitation say?" he was asked.

The Dragon admitted that he didn't have it with him and the man's eyes narrowed suspiciously.

"No invitation?" He reached for the telephone.

"Let's get out of here," I whispered. "He's calling the police."

It's not easy to make a getaway in a car you can only be certain will start if it's at the top of a steep incline, but we managed.

The Dragon looked at me. "This is all your fault. Keeping track of weddings is women's work."

I stopped being patient and reasonable. "You yelled at me before because I had the date wrong. I did all I could to cooperate. I changed my day on Frank Mirachi's boat to next week after you told me I was confused. I'm sorry I had thought the wedding was next week."

We looked at each other. Next week.

"Do you think Tommy and Debbie would like to be married at sea?" I asked. "I can't think of any way I can explain this to Frank and Gigi."

"Don't try to explain," the Dragon suggested. "Let them read it in the Mariner."

High blood pressure

To the Editor:

Blood pressures at the low end of "high" blood pressure (90-104 mm Hg diastolic) are often called "mild." Yet pressure in this range, if untreated, can still result in the complications associated with high blood pressure: heart disease, kidney disease and stroke. In fact the risk of many heart problems and early death for people with so-called mild high blood pressure is more than twice that for those with readings below 90 mm Hg.

Fortunately, however, recent studies show that treatment can make a big difference in reducing early death and illness for people in this group. It can also prevent pressures in this range from going to even higher levels where a patient's chances of developing serious complications are even greater.

One study, the National Heart Lung and Blood Institute's Hypertension Detection and Follow-Up Program (HDFP), recently reported specifically on the effects of treatment on stroke. "Mild" high blood pressure patients treated systematically in special MDFP centers had 31.8 percent fewer fatal and nonfatal strokes than others in the program who received routine care in their communities. Other studies, such as the Australian National Blood Pressure Study and the U.S. Public Health Service Study of Mild Hypertension also show major benefits for treating levels characterized as "mild."

Treatment for pressure in this category often involves dietary changes such as losing weight and cutting down on sodium. Drugs may also be prescribed, particularly if patients have a family history of heart problems, high cholesterol levels, diabetes or other factors that increase their risks of developing complications.

Letters...

High blood pressure . . .

Until the recent studies, most of the medical community had not been treating "mild" high blood pressure, because the benefits of treatment had not been clearly established. In 1980, the Joint National Committee on Detection, Evaluation and Treatment of High Blood Pressure revisited earlier national recommendations to include treating pressures in this range. The committee also suggested a new term for diastolic levels between 90 and 104 mm Hg, stratum I, because they believed that the word mild was an inappropriate way to describe a serious condition.

The new recommendations mean that high blood pressure patients, as well as the health professionals who treat them, need to pay careful attention to blood pressure elevations at any level.

During the month of May, blood pressure checks and calibrations of home blood pressure cuffs will be done free of charge at the Cohasset Medical Center. For further details call 383-0700.

Sewer Comm. on its way

To the Editor:

The sewer commission is committed to pursuing less costly and less environmentally offensive alternatives to major central sewering. This objective is required by federal law and has been demanded by the people of Cohasset on November 29, 1982, at Special Town Meeting and overwhelmingly reaffirmed by the Annual Town Meeting of April 3.

This board will work closely with all town departments, town boards, its town counsel, its special town counsel and Ward Engineering Associates in order to ensure that Cohasset can develop an affordable, equitable and manageable plan to a vast majority and funded by the state and federal governments. With the interest, input and cooperation of all we are positive that we shall achieve our objective. We understand that whatever plan that is finally developed, it must have a strong consensus support of a large majority of our residents. Ward Engineering recognizes this also.

We are now on our way. We ask the citizens of Cohasset to give Ward Engineering full cooperation and support in expediting their vital work.

In the interim while we develop a townwide plan, the sewer commissioners urge all residents and commercial establishments that have cellar drains and sump pumps connected to the town sewer system to please have them disconnected. This action will significantly aid us in maintaining our present plant within its discharge permit perimeters.

Another look at asbestos

To the Editor:

If School Superintendent Crowell is trying to reassure the citizens that there is no asbestos problem in the schools I would have to give him a failing grade. In the asbestos content article which appeared on page two of the April 6 edition of the Cohasset Mariner, Superintendent Crowell was quoted as saying that he had taken "the bull by the horns" (on this asbestos issue) by having had air samples taken and that since the results were below EPA standards he went on to assure us that there was absolutely no asbestos exposure problem in our school system.

If a truly effective asbestos identification and evaluation program has been throroughly conducted within the school buildings, Crowell's statement may have, to a degree, been appropriate but little was said to be convincing.

If in fact there is any friable asbestos material present, which has a potential for fiber release, such as any sprayed on application, then Crowell's statement was either blindly optimistic and based on misinformation, or it is part of a conscious effort to ignore and defuse a politically hot issue which possibly has serious economic impact.

I feel his statement may have been grossly irresponsible having been made by a public official. The safety, health and well-being of not just the general public but that of our children who are possibly more susceptible and who are spending 30-40 hours per week in a potentially hazardous environment is at stake. Also consider the possible exposure of teachers and support staff in these buildings.

According to a Massachusetts Department of Labor and Industries, Division of Occupational Hygiene report entitled "Asbestos Exposures in Mass. Public Schools," it is not possible to adequately measure potential public exposures to asbestos because of the limitations of air sampling technology. This same report also found that in schools where custodial staff performed the initial asbestos identification, as I understand was the case in Cohasset, 50 percent of those schools reporting no asbestos were later found to contain asbestos.

Furthermore, this air sampling approach is completely out of line with EPA recommended procedures for assessing potential asbestos problems within the schools. Although the air sampling may be a fair method of assessing the present and immediate exposure problem, it is not recommended in the EPA guidance document "Asbestos-Containing Materials in School Buildings" for a number of reasons having to do with the potential for exposure. This same guidance document has been sent to each school system in the U.S. and outlines requirements as well as suggestions for school officials trying to implement an effective asbestos identification and evaluation program.

Federal legislation passed in May of last year gives all elementary and secondary school systems in the country until June 28 of this year to conduct an asbestos identification program. Although the results do not have to be reported back directly, they are a matter of public record. I'm afraid we are going to see, in the next several years, instances where asbestos exposure problems will be confirmed in schools that had previously and all too eagerly reported "no problem." This will probably leave those school systems open to heavy law suits and costly settlements such as those imposed upon Johns-Manville Corp. and others after similar negligence had been proven.

Crowell may have been misinformed or misled, as there is a vast market for consulting that results in a "there is no problem" type of solution. Can we be so quick and sure to declare "no hazard" when even the experts admit that they are not so sure that there is a minimum safe exposure limit?

My intent is not to attack the man as I have nothing but respect for his administrative abilities and can appreciate his relative success in these recent difficult times, nor do I wish to add to a potential hysteria, but neither do I wish to acquiesce where potentially such a real danger may exist. Crowell may be convinced, but his statement only leaves me still concerned.

Gwinn writes to D.A.

(The following is a copy of a letter to Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt.)

F.C. DeSantis, chairman of the Cohasset Board of Sewer Commissioners, of which I am a member, on the morning of April 14 called an emergency meeting for 8 p.m. that evening. I ask that your office rule as to the legality of such a meeting in consideration of the following points:

1) I was never formally notified that this meeting was to be held, by either the chairman, the other commissioner, nor by the board secretary; nor was a message left at my home. (That I heard at all of the meeting was happenstance.)

2) The subject for the meeting was to transfer certain authority from me as former chairman to the present chairman, to attempt to limit my exercise of office, thereby depriving the town in part . my services as a duly elected commissioner, and to issue a letter alleging certain actions on my part were unauthorized.

3) The Subject of the meeting did not qualify as calling for emergency action, the 48 hour requirement for positing a special meeting being timely notice enough.

If your office rules that the conditions for posting and/or holding this meeting were not legal, I ask that all motions offered at this meeting be declared null and void. I take this position in the interests of maintaining lawful and orderly procedure in the holding and conduct of town commission meetings within the Commonwealth and am not, at this time, in any way asking that your office address the specific merits of the legality of any motion offered at this meeting.

Fire Prevention Day

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Social Service League and the Cohasset Fire Department wish to invite all the citizens of the Town of Cohasset to attend a Fire Prevention Day to be held Saturday, May 7 at 2 p.m. at the Cohasset Town Hall Commons and parking lot. This event is being sponsored by the Cohasset Social Service League.

It is our hope that you and your families will attend the festivities so that we may express to you the need for fire prevention safety in your everyday lives.

There will be: Antique Fire Engines, Jaws of Life Demonstrations, a film: Fire Prevention, How to Extinguish a Fire, Ambulance/Fire Engine Displays and more.

Your participation in this event will make it a success and will educate everyone. Your support is greatly appreciated.

Martin W. Dooley
Chief of Department
Cohasset Fire Department

Thanks to the hosts

To the Editor:

On Sunday morning Cohasset AFS families said farewell to 22 students and chaperones from the Casonovia, N.Y. High School AFS Club.

During the latter part of last week the Casanovia Club members were hosted by Cohasset families, attended high school classes and were involved in planned community activities as part of an AFS short-term exchange.

The Cohasset AFS chapter and the high school club, sponsoring the return exchange, would like to express their appreciation to all the Cohasset hosting families as well as to the faculty and student body at CHS for the outpouring of hospitality shown to our visiting Casanovia students.

The AFS short-term exchance program helps to foster a greater awareness and understanding of the cultural diversity which exists in the U.S. by encouraging high school AFS clubs to visit and become a part of another family and community for a brief period.

It was evident as the group departed after only five days in Cohasset, that warm and enriching friendships had been cultivated. Thanks to all who opened their homes and hearts!

Studds appoints aide

Congressman Gerry Studds appointed Maureen Garde as his new South Shore Regional Representative.

Garde, who worked from 1977 to 1981 in the Congressman's South Shore office, and served since 1981 as his Cape Cod and Islands Representative, assumed her new duties April 1. Garde is a 1976 graduate of Boston College where she received a B.A. in Urban Studies and is a master's candidate at Boston University.

She replaces Alexander (Sandy) See, who has joined the Boston law firm of Roche, Carens, and DeGiacomo. See served as Studds' South Shore Regional Representative since 1973 when Studds was first elected to the U.S. House of Representatives.

"Sandy has done an outstanding job on the South Shore and leaves with the respect and affection of all who have worked with him over the past ten years," said Studds.

"However, I am very pleased to that Maureen, who has been with my staff for six years, has agreed to return to the South Shore. With her knowledge of the federal government and her familiarity with the unique problems facing Southeastern Massachusetts, I am sure she will prove to be a great asset to the people of the South Shore."

Garde heads the Congressman's South Shore office, which is located at 193 Rockland Street, Hanover. Assisting her will be caseworkers Stephanie Toomey and Donna Harrison.

Frank England returns with more information . . .

the people it serves is the primary concern of this new selectman.

England was a member of the school committee for six years until 1981. During that time, when he served as chairman of the committee, England took steps to provide greater communication between the committee and the community.

For the first time, England provided the public with actual school department budget documents and accurate backup sheets. It was imperative, he determined at that time, that the public know the exact content of the school department budget.

"That last year when I was on the committee, when I was chairman," he remembers, "there was no problem having the school budget approved, people knew exactly what they were spending their money on — everything was completely out in the open."

England says he will continue this policy of public openness into his new assignment as selectman. The major reason he sought public office again was to ensure this policy would not be tarnished, along with his belief he could "help to see that Cohasset is being well run."

With his professional background as a bonding manager for Aetna Life and Casualty, England thinks he will be of service to the town, providing "a little management, decision-making and organization."

He is willing to confront and publically discuss the issues facing the town, with the ultimate goal of helping to protect the finer characteristics of this town which lured people like himself to Cohasset many years ago.

But of all the decisions to be made for the future of Cohasset and its residents, none is more predominant than his emphasis on communication between all town boards and the public.

"I think the major issue facing this town is to see that all citizens are treated equitably and fairly on a consistent basis. Other than that, I don't see too many major issues confronting Cohasset," he says.

England does not view community decisions to be made about such things as the sewers and beach permits as issues, but as problems which the town is confronting. They are not problems common to Cohasset alone, he suggests. And Cohasset should seek the advice and counsel of neighboring towns that have experienced the same conditions and produced a solution.

As a member of the school committee, there were many times he picked up the phone, called a neighboring school committee member, and asked what that particular committee did about a similar problem.

"I had to do a little digging and a little talking, but the results were better for my effort. Why not ask Scituate or Hingham what they did about a certain problem; certainly Cohasset is not unique in every one of its concerns. Why re-invent the wheel when we could ask someone who has gone through a similar experience?" he figures.

Another means of confronting a difficult dilemma might be to form a citizens committee. England says he is a proponent of citizens committees, when such a group is used wisely. He feels the citizens search committee, formed when the school committee was looking for a new superintendent, was such a successful group.

"We had talent on that committee you couldn't pay for," he says. "We made one charge to them, and they did an excellent job. In this town, there is more talent than you could believe. And all we have to do is ask for their help and most people would volunteer to assist their town. Very few residents of Cohasset would be unwilling to help their community."

England sees his role as selectman, not as an authoritarian, but as a "town father" who leads by asking questions and bringing issues before the public for their input. He is a firm believer that the public should be aware of all the governmental decisions being made which will effect their lives.

When the school superintendent signed a contract with the school committee, England presented copies to the newspapers for publication. He calls this "a common sense approach to town government."

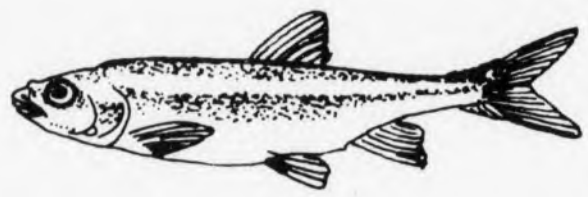
It is the selectmen's job to help each committee know what the others are doing, and to keep the public informed of decisions being made, he adds.

In keeping with this policy, the present board of selectmen scheduled a "planning meeting" recently. At that session, the new board of selectmen sat down together to figure out "what our short and long-term objectives will be," England said.

The 62 year-old selectman says this is simply one way to initiate good management into town government. "It is always good management to do first things first and not to put it off until later," he adds.

England and the new board members stepped immediately into problem-solving recently when they were asked to resolve the fate of the Cohasset Common Historical District Committee. The new town official says the selectmen must know all the facts and figures "and see what is going on" before any definitive decision is made.

Although he was neither a proponent of a three-member, or five-member board of slelecmen, England thinks the new selectmen will work together successfully for the benefit of the town. He now believes the five-member board of selectmen will result in a campaign which is "more issue-oriented, rather than a board based on personalities."



One issue England feels strongly about is the decision now confronting residents regarding the sewers. He definitely says "Mr. DeSantis has done this town a great service by making us take a second look, rather than being stampeded into building a big sewer plant.

"In 1979, this issue was never really addressed. It was never explained to this town what would happen if the entire town was sewered," he adds. "It was never explained that every lot would become available for building because of the central sewering. If we wanted a town of about 10,000 —15,000 population, then it is fine. But I think a lot of people don't want Cohasset to become that large a community."

England doesn't agree the sewer issue has become muddled in confusion. He sees it as "democracy in action. Mr. DeSantis did us all a great favor. Now we are asking questions, not just accepting answers."

He plans to stay involved for a long time in this town he has come to love. And that may be for some time. Recently, England flew down to Florida to help his mother Dorothea, celebrate her 101st birthday. England is the youngest of her three offspring.

At 62, England has no intentions of stopping his hectic schedule which seems will very likely become even more busy due to continual participation in his community.

Staff appointments accepted by school committee

By Jane Lane

The school committee made several staff appointments at its Monday night meeting. Supt. Eugene Crowell noted that two insturctors have been eliminated from the budget, thus saving $1500 from the originally anticipated plan.

The present staffing budget saved $51,815 through attrition, he said, rather than the $49,000 he originally expected.

The staff reductions included one Deer Hill position, a one-half math position and a one-half librarian position.

Supt. Crowell strongly recommended a one-half kindergarten teacher be added to accomodate four sections of kindergarten classes. The superintendent expects about 80 kindergarten students in the fall, who will conprise four classes of 19, 19, 20 and 20 students in each section.

The following staff positions were approved by the school committee:

Teacher contracts for the Joseph Osgood School: Susan Baush, Faith Bowker, Ruth Clark, Christine Collins, Marilyn D'Angelo, Delia DiBenedetto, Elizabeth Fink, Kathy Jarvis, Shirley Manna, Dorothy Montuori, Marilyn Power, Helen Pratt, Marie Price, Shirley Tewksbury and non-tenure teacher, Irene Volpe (To third year).

Teacher contracts for the Deer Hill School: Joseph Becker, Joan Cassiani, Patricia Chase, Elizabeth Cisneros, Frank Deakin, Kathryn Fox, Pauline Gallagher, Dorothy Hibbard, Genevieve Kent, Dennis Kuntz and Raymond Levin.

Also, John MacInnis, Dorothy McDonald, Joann Magoun, Jean O'Malley, Bette Rega, Lawrence Shultz, Patricia Sullivan, Katherine Whitley and non-tenure teachers: Dorothy Wondolowski (To tenure) and Denise Yess (To tenure).

Teacher contracts for the Junior/Senior High School: Mary Babaian, Dorothy Bates, Elizabeth Beatson, Joseph Bouchard, Virginia Burbank, Lois Cecsarini, Clark Chatterton, Kenneth Cisneros, Frances Cronin, Charles Davis, Kearin Dunn and Ronald Emmons.

Also, Samuel Erbe, Joseph Federico, George Fortin, James Franey, Stephen Graebener, Carolyn Gray, Paul Hogan, Mary Holmes, Walter Hughes, Nancy Kealey, Donald Kelly, William Kite and Doris Lahage.

Also, Edwin Leach, Edward Leary, Thomas Lucas, Edward MacDermott, F. Allan MacDonald, Bryan Marks, John Mika, Paul Narkiewicz, Thomas O'Neil, John Packard, Patrick Plante and John Raccuia.

Also, Marea Rice, Joan Robbins, Marie Schleiff, Edward Sheehan, Robert Thompson, Dennis Walsh, Marilyn Watson, JoEllen Wood, Joan Wool, Patricia Wunschel, Patricia Coultrip, Donald Reade and Maureen Alcott.

Non-tenure teachers, to tenure: Michael Gill, Jeffrey Dodge and Antonette Jillson.

To third year: Jon Anderson, Carolyn Contis, Joseph Neundorf and Anne Porter.

To second year: William Fallon and David Magnussen.

School secretaries: Rita Broderick, Mary Brennock, Patricia Bowen, Barbara Conte, Phyllis Grayken, Jean Higgins, Linda Jorgensen, Emily Saccone, Diane Saleski, and Sheila Travers.

Cafeteria workers: Mildred Salyards, manager, full-time; Elizabeth Sinopoli, baker, full-time; Cora Ainslie, full-time; Jeanette McNeil, full-time; Eleanor Soule, full-time; Frances Ricketts, part-time; Marie Byrne, part-time; Eileen Jacobucci, Deer Hill coordinator; Roseann Dooley, Osgood coordinator; and Virginia Waaser, cashier.

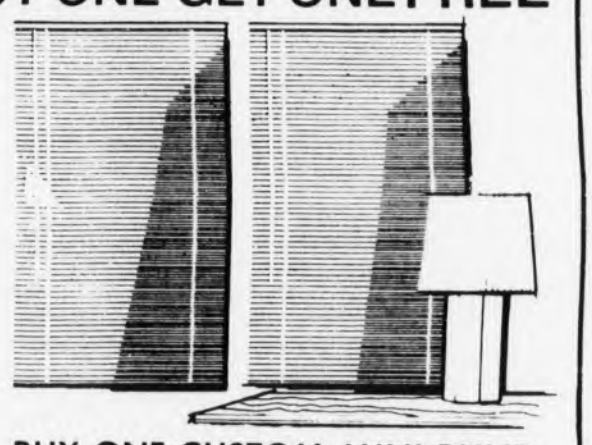
Administrators: Stephen Hart, John Creamer, Gino DiGirolamo, Richard Streeter, Kenneth Ekberg and John Leary.

Non-union personnel — Nurses: Carol Ciciotte and Ethel Gormley; Library: Elizabeth Glasfeld, Marjorie Murphy and Mildred Woomer; Cafeteria: Patricia Wunschel; and Superintendent's secretary: Agnes Brighton.

McKinnon supports T proposal to fill federal grant

State Senator Allan McKinnon said recently he strongly supports the "MBTA's proposal to file a federal grant application to procure 58 additional Red Line Rapid Transit Cars."



He said that additional trains on the Red Line are necessary to resolve the critical condition of transportation from the South Shore to Boston. With only two access arteries to Boston — Route 3 and 3A — overcrowded conditions exist and commuters need the Red Line. However, he acknowledged the existing MBTA service is also overcrowded and needs relief.

Because of upcoming major reconstruction of the Southeast Expressway, the opening of the Quincy Adams station and the fast-growing pace of the South Shore area are factors that make it essential, McKinnon said, that the "Red Line service be improved and its passenger capacity be increased dramatically."

Meet Ruth Woodriff . . . she's in love with the Bruins

By Moira McCarthy

Ruth Woodriff's middle name is Bruins.

For the past 20 years, the Oak Street resident has watched every Bruins game and collected every Bruins souvenir there is.

But it wasn't always that way.

"I grew up hating hockey," she said, leaning back comfortably in her black and gold outfit. "I thought it was much too rough."

But then things changed for Ruth.

"My son came in one night and made me watch a Bruins game. I was hooked right then, and have been ever since."

It was then that Ruth started collecting Bruins momentos, "like any other little hobby." But her hobby grew bigger and bigger.

She now has everything from earrings, to posters, to bathmats, to hockey pucks that all have the Bruins insignia.

She has coffee mugs, baby bibs, sweaters, shirts, buttons, bumper stickers, ties and balloons. And that barely puts a dent in the collection.

In fact, Ruth recently opened her own "Bruins Room" on the third floor of her home as a tribute to her favorite team.

"Everything was packed away in boxes before then," she said. "So when I decided to do the room, I invited 108 friends over for a grand opening party."

Before then, Ruth said, "No one had ever seen my collections, not even my best friend."

Ruth Woodruff is a Bruins' memorabilia fanatic. She shows off 15 years' worth of collecting to Tess Fitzpatrick. (Greg Derr photo)

Ruth said that although the collection is hers, 75 percent of it came as gifts from her close friends, Bob and Anne Wall of Weymouth.

"It's great to finally have a room big enough," she added.

Ruth only attends an average of two Bruins games a year, but she watches all of them on television. And the few games she's been to have been memorable.

The first game she attended, Ruth sat in Derek Sanderson's box seat.

Then on a "Weekend with the Bruins" trip that her husband Oliver ("Woody") bought at a celebrity auction in New York, they had the Channel 7 sky box to themselves.

That is until Johnny Bucyk walked in.

"My son and I were thrilled," she said.

Ruth's most memorable Bruin play, of course, is Bobby Orr's flight through air after scoring a Stanley Cup winning goal.

"I still don't have that picture," she added.

Out of Ruth's four children, Ralph, Dennis, Laurie and Scott, only Ralph and Scott are hockey lovers. Scott plays for Emerson College.

She also has three grandchildren to work on.

But could anyone enjoy the Bruins as much as Ruth does?

"Every day I look at my room," Ruth said with a sparkle in her eye that looked something like fresh cleaned ice, "I really enjoy it."

And she enjoys today's Bruins as much as the golden oldies.

"Right now they're as good as they used to be. They did go into a slump for a while."

Will the Bruins go all the way this season?

"Absolutely," Ruth said. "I never doubt for a moment that they won't win. I believe right till the last minute they're going to win the Stanley Cup."

With fans like Ruth, how can they lose?

New Fire Capt. Gurry has some new ideas

By Mike Berger

Newly promoted Fire Capt. James Lee Gurry wants a proficient first aid training program for all firefighters.

This is his goal as he begins his duties as EMT instruction coordinator.

All certified EMT's must complete 48 hours of refresher training every two years and also must have CPR cards updated each year.

Gurry will be providing the in-service training for the Fire Dept's 12 EMT's which compose over half of the department's 24-member force. The department is short two men.

To be a certified EMT, a firefighter must take and pass a 99-hour course and a written practical examination to receive a state or national certificate.

Once the EMT is certified he must re-apply every two years with the mandatory 48-hours training. Thirteen hours, taught by Gurry, will be applied toward the 48-hour requirement.

Each EMT must also be a firefighter. The number of Cohasset EMT's has grown. Originally when Cohasset purchased an ambulance in 1976, six men were certified as EMT's.

Now that the ambulance is seven years-old and its mileage stands at 62,000 Gurry isn't sure how long the ambulance will be operational, but down the road officials must either decide to rent an ambulance or purchase a new one.

Besides providing training for the EMT's, Gurry also instructs first responder or CPR training for the remainder of the force. He teaches basic emergency treatment techniques and how to use "Jaws of Life" equipment.

Gurry has been an EMT since 1975 and has seen the number of emergency calls grown from 200 in 1975-76 to over 400 annually, on average.

"These are all types of calls. You never know what you are going to get such as cutting a ring off a finger to falling down the stairs.

"But with children it's a different ballgame when a child is injured. You feel something different," he said.

EMT's work one of two daily shifts, either a daily 10-hour shift or at night for 14 hours. Besides Capt. Gurry, other Fire Dept. officials responding to each emergency call are Capt. Mark Trask, Capt. Roger Lincoln, Acting Capt. Dick Conley or Fire Chief Martin Dooley.

Gurry said those who need emergency care or those who are calling in for the injured should clearly give the name, the address and the nature of the emergency. "Also give us any medical information available such as allergies or type of medication the person is taking.

"Later it would be helpful for the person to give the hospital the Blue Cross-Blue Shield or medical agency identification number," Gurry said.

"Make sure the person is able to breathe and if possible, stop the bleeding.

"You know it's funny but some people don't want to call us to send the engines because it calls attention to them and they're worried about it," he said.

Capt. Gurry will be giving a blood pressure demonstration and explain the ambulance procedures and equipment during the Saturday's Fire Prevention Day program at Cohasset Common, starting at 2 p.m.

He added, all those interested in learning about standard first aid procedure should call Robert Tassaretti of the American Red Cross at 471-5440.

Fire Prevention Day

Fire Prevention Day, to be held in Cohasset Saturday, May 7 is a first-time event for this small South Shore community which recently welcomed a new Fire Chief, Martin Dooley.

Sponsored jointly by the fire department and the Social Service League of Cohasset, the program will be directed by Fire Capt. Mark Trask at Town Hall, adjacent parking lot and on the Common.

Beginning at 2 p.m. the program will feature a number of educational happenings as well as some spectacular demonstrations and displays.

Inside Town Hall, decorated with visual displays, visitors can view a film titled, "Fire Prevention" with accompanying comments by Capt. Trask. A question and answer session will follow the film.

The Fire Department is also distributing free brochures, window decals, phone stickers, home fire inspection games and printed reminders on fire prevention "Do's and Don'ts" as well as Home Fire Exit information.

In the parking lot adjoining the Town Hall, visitors may watch two wrecked automobiles being pried apart by the "Jaws of Life," the miraculous machine that enables fire departments to rescue victims of automobile accidents. Capt. Trask estimates that it will take up to an hour to totally disengage each car, as the machine removes sections one by one, as it would happen in a real rescue attempt.

Live demonstrations of extinguishing small household fires will be presented with the aid of home fire extinguishers donated by the ABC Emergency Equipment company of Marshfield. Capt. Trask says this demonstration should be especially interesting to homemakers, who may have to deal with small kitchen fires and similar household conflagrations caused by misuse of matches or smoking materials.

While a helicopter flight may be an exciting way to tour any of the Hawaiian Islands, it is almost a necessity in exploring Kauai. Of the major Hawaiian Islands, Kauai is the least developed and, perhaps, the most beautiful. It has very few roads and storms and currents make a sea landing all but impossible. Yet, Kauai has spectacular, velvety black-sand beaches, rain forests and 5,243-foot Mount Waialeale. Kauai was the first of the Hawaiian archipelago to emerge from the sea. It is the greenest, lushest, and wettest island, with an annual rainfall of 400 to 600 inches. Social Service League completes another good year

"Another good year" turned out to be the theme of the annual meeting of the Social Service League of Cohasset held Wednesday, April 27 at St. Stephen's Parish Hall. The well-attended gathering heard officers and staff of the organization report on the events of 1982 among its workers and committees.

Andrea Merrill, manager of the League's Consignment Shop, reported a year of change and growth. Noting that the Shop at Cushing Plaza has had an extensive "face lift," Merrill focused on the new "automatic mark-down" system of pricing inaugurated this year and attributed increased receipts to this and other improvements in operating procedures.

Carolyn Houseman, senior social worker on the League staff, described her department as one in which workers "wear many hats" and cover many areas of social need among Cohasset residents. In 1982, the third year of the League's counselling service, a total of 843 office or home visits were made to clients, of which 593 were to elder citizens and 173 in matters of general family service.

A grant was received from the South Shore Elder Services to cover geriatric counselling, and another was received for the current year.

Eileen Kirby, executive director at Elder Services, and Janet Berrault, fiscal manager, were among those present at the meeting.

A highlight of the meeting was the appearance of Fire Chief Martin Dooley and Fire Prevention Officer Captain Mark Trask, who presented a preview of the events which will take place on Cohasset Common during Fire Prevention Day, Saturday, May 7.

The Social Service League of Cohasset is the sponsor of the event.

Elections for board position in the League were held during the meeting. Three new board members were elected: Mrs. Edwin Lincoln, Jr., Mrs. Warren Thomson, and Mrs. Paul Desmond. Mrs. John Riley was elected secretary of the League.

CHS sports update . . .

By Alana O'Brien

SOFTBALL

The CHS softball team went 0-3 last week with losses to E. Bridgewater, Norwell 7-5 and Rockland 12-5.

In their home contest vs. Norwell, sophomore short-stop Janet DiGiralama had three hits, while seniors Gia Barresi and Caroline Zwicker knocked in two.

At Rockland, the Skippers held it close in the first few innings until the Bulldogs overpowered them in the fifth and sixth innings.

Standouts for Cohasset were senior Caroline Zwicker and sophomores Tara Standford and Sarah Seavey.

The squad will face Sacred Heart of Kingston Thursday on home territory.

Historical Society plans summer museum season

By David Wadsworth

The Cohasset Historical Society announces the opening dates for its summer museum season at Cohasset center. Three museum buildings, each portraying a different aspect of the history of this small New England coastal village, will open for the summer Saturday, June 25 and will remain open until September 30.

The Society's Maritime Museum, the Capt. John Wilson Historical House and the Independence Gown Museum will be on public view each day, Tuesday to Sunday, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m., with a curator and volunteer guides present to assist visitors.

The Maritime Museum, dating from circa 1790 and originally merchant Samuel Bates' Ship Chandlery, houses a unique collection of maritime artifacts, prints, paintings and documents relating to Cohasset's history as a fishing village during the great "Age Of Sail." Also shown is the story of the building of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, and a new exhibit features relics from the 18th and 19th century shipwrecks and lifesaving era.

Cohasset was the home of numerous "Deep Sea Captains" and some of the great sailing vessels of that time are shown in model form. The Maritime Museum also contains a display of general historical interest including artifacts dating from earliest Colonial days, and a recently expanded exhibit of relics representing the stone-age culture of the Quonahassit Indians.

The Capt. John Wilson Historical House, dating from 1810 for more than a century was the home of one of Cohasset's seafaring families. The Historical Society has furnished the house with antique household implements and furniture to represent an early 19th century Cohasset home. A children's room and an old kitchen are among the displays featured in the Capt. Wilson House.

The "Independence" building derives its title from the name of the volunteer fire company which once made its headquarters there. During the mid and later 19th century this was the home of the "Independence" hand-tub pumper, the town's first fire engine.

Today the old building, Cohasset's oldest surviving public building, houses the Historical Society's Gown Museum, a collection of early 19th to early 20th century gowns, costumes and accessories unique in its diversity. Featured are a bridal room and a children's room.

On another floor, photographs of Cohasset's early fire and police departments can be viewed, as well as the old "lock-up" dating from the time the "Independence" served as Cohasset's first police station.

Admission to the Historical Society's three museums is 75 cents per building, or $1.50 for all three. Children under 12 are admitted for 25 cents.

The Society plans to hold a number of special events this coming summer beginning on opening day, marking the 55th anniversary of its founding, to be announced later.

Campaign $$$ spent for gifts & teams

State Sen. Allan McKinnon acknowledges he did spend campaign money for weddings, gifts and sports teams. But he says there is nothing wrong with it and it does not violate the state's campaign finance law. He said last year he bought about $500 on wedding and other gifts from campaign money and estimated he spent about $46,000 for all purposes. He believes contributors know candidates use part of the money to buy gifts and make donations. "It's something that you're expected to do and you don't resent doing. And I don't know that it's such a bad expenditure of money. Rather than spending money on brochures telling what a good fellow you are, to give it to charity . . .I don't know that that's so wrong."

He added although you have $2,000 raised at a fundraiser, for a steak dinner for that fundraiser, it costs about $20,000 to put on. "I have spent money for hockey teams, Little League, Pop Warner. These are worthwhile things and you get to know people of a district better at these functions." McKinnon has always supported public financing of elections to avoid private and special interest donations, which are "sometimes not conducive to improving the political climate."

At the Art Center

The exhibit opens May 6 and runs through June 4. The opening reception will be Friday, May 13 from 6-8 p.m.

Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m. and Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Old Ironsides Antique Show committee members, Mrs. N. Frank Neer, Cohasset, Mrs. Bruce Bunten, Hingham, and Mrs. John Bleakie, Cohasset, examine items for preview, Thursday, May 19 at Boston's Park Plaza Castle. Show continues May 20-22 with proceeds benefiting USS Constitution Museum, Charlestown.

Light Up Your Life

Graduation is not far off. For many graduates this means a room at college, a new apartment away from home even a new home!

For that room at college we have student desk lamps, bed lamps that hook on the bed, or a table lamp for bedside or study area.

A new apartment may mean a need for a floor lamp, a T.V. lamp, or a pin-up fixture.

In a new home, your graduate might need a swag lamp for bedside or den. A pole lamp for the living room.

For any room, a Quoizel Lamp comes in all sizes and colors to suit all tastes and decor. Stop in to see us at NORTH RIVER ELECTRIC SUPPLY, 433 Washington St., Norwell and find the lamp you are looking for in our Flagstaff Lighting Showroom*, or call us at* 659-2272.

Time was, when May Day meant dancing around a May Pole and May Baskets hung on the front door by children who rang the bell and ran away — trying to escape a kiss from the recipient. Now the first of May means "help," a distress signal and military parades in Moscow. May Day customs are forgotten and our children have never had a basket created from oblong boxes, square berry pints and oatmeal boxes covered with pastel crepe paper. Fluted petals, paper flowers of pink, yellow or pale green, made pretty baskets with scissor-curled fringe, braided handles and fluttering ribbons. Sometimes little verses were included with the basket of goodies such as this luscious combination of chocolate, butterscotch and peanut butter, with no baking needed and easy as can be for children to make.

CHOCO-SCOTCH CLUSTERS

1 6 oz. pkg. chocolate morsels
1 6 oz. pkg. butterscotch morsels
2 T peanut butter
4 c. rice crispies cereal

Melt morsels and peanut butter together in top portion of double boiler over hot but not boiling water, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Stir in rice crispies until well-coated. Drop by level measuring tablespoon onto waxed paper or buttered cookie sheets. Let stand in cool place until firm. Makes about 4 doz. about 1½" in diameter.

Another special day in May is coming on Sunday, giving us all a chance to pay tribute to — guess who? That certain lady who cares about and for, almost everything — gardens, pets, the state of the nation, the worn spot in the rug, hungry people, but, most of all, her family. One thoughtful way to remember her on Mother's Day is to lure her out of the kitchen, perhaps preparing a meal for her for a change. Perfect for this time of year is this molded salad which makes a pretty springtime dish, reflecting the colors of yellow forsythia and greening lawns. B.J. Babcock and her committee served it at the April Community League luncheon and with centerpieces of jonquils and forsythia done by Barbara Prouty and green tablecloths, tables looked festive when further adorned with this

CREAMY PINEAPPLE SALAD

1 pkg. (3 oz.) lime jello
1/2 tsp. salt
1 c. boiling water
1 can (1 lb., 4½ oz.) crushed pineapple
2 T lemon juice
1 c. sour cream

Dissolve jello and salt in boiling water. Drain pineapple, reserving 1/4 c. syrup. Add syrup, lemon juice and sour cream to jello. Beat until blended. Pour into shallow pan. Place in freezer 20-25 min., or until firm 1" around edges and soft in center. Pour into bowl. Whip until fluffy. Fold in pineapple. Pour into 1 qt. mold. Chill until firm.

"There is no more popular symbol of love," Judith Olney writes in "The Joy of Chocolate," and Chocolaholic Lora Brody says of her fondness: "When it became clear that I was not going to own a Mercedes 450SL or a sable coat, I decided to settle for chocolate. It's racy without being dangerous." Here's another little something children can make for Mom, as it's described as being "fool-proof, fail-proof and delicious" and is called

MAGIC FRENCH FUDGE

3 6 oz. pkgs. semi-sweet chocolate morsels
1 8 oz. can sweetened condensed milk
Dash of salt
1½ tsp. vanilla
1/2 c. chopped nuts, optional

In top of double boiler, melt chocolate over hot water, stirring occasionally. Remove from heat. Stir in other ingredients. Spread mixture in 8x8" pan lined with waxed paper. Chill for 2 hours, or until firm. Turn fudge onto cutting board. Peel off paper and cut into squares. Makes about 1¾ pounds.

Respite services available through DSS

Evelyn Strawn, Plymouth Area Director for the Department of Social Services, has announced that respite services are available to families who are caring for a developmentally disabled family member at home. Respite services provide brief, planned periods of relief for families to renew energies so that they can continue to care for the disabled family member in their own home. Respite services can be provided in the family's home, in the respite worker's home, at a day or overnight camp, or at a residential facility.

Services are now available due to $2 million of supplementary funding for respite care approved by the Legislature on March 31 and signed by the Governor on April 7. This funding will enable the Department to serve those 1500 families who were participating in the program last summer and fall, as well as the approximately 1000 applicants now on DSS waiting lists. The Department will also be able to serve approximately 1000 additional families statewide. Families will be offered up to 10 days of service between now and June 30, after which time a new service period begins.

Anyone who has received respite services, is on a waiting list, or thinks he is eligible for services and would like to receive them, may call the office at 585-6533. The contact person is Robert Heffernan. Eligibility guidelines follow the federal definition of developmental disability.

The 'T' report... a study in how not to do something

By Lois Martin

If it were not free, it would be a hot item on the best seller list. It's the "State Auditor's Report on the Activities of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority Jan. 1, 1981 to Dec. 31, 1981."

That's not a racy title but the content makes up for that. It's an expose on our old friend, the MBTA, the agency that has needed support from passengers, the state and from about 79 communities, 23 of which have no service.

The book's a sketch. That is if you like non fiction comedies, laced with unveiled intrigue, overt mismanagement, flagrantly implied fraud. Of sex, though, there's nothing. That's probably a shame because one suspects that would have been a promising chapter had State Auditor John Finnegan expanded his investigation.

PATCHES

This is the best work Finnegan has done. I've seen his earlier efforts. They were tedious at best, losing the reader in his auditing jargon.

Not so with the T's tale. Maybe they'll make a movie out of it. It won't have draw as a romance but as a farce it'll top the box office.

The audit's summary sheet for the press says the T has "squandered" (sounds more fun than overspent doesn't it?) $28 million because of poor judgment and weak financial controls. Those are kind words that few would have used for the reasons behind the deficit.

To start with, $22 million went down the tube when the T decided to rebuild 88 of its cars, kind of a do-it-yourself-project that went awry. The thing was they didn't know how to do the work. And apparently the Red Line Car Kits didn't come with instructions. Since they started the repair though, they've turned over the rest of the job to someone who's done it before. Merely an expensive lesson, that's all.

Then Finnegan nails the T for paying $238 million to Boston and Maine Corporation for operating its commuter rail lines without verifying the costs.

Hey, you get a bill, you pay it. You wouldn't be doing business with anyone if you couldn't take his word on his price. Matter of a state agency being outdatedly trusting.

Then you get to the juicier parts. For example there's a problem about dollar bills; 205,000 of them. It seems many more dollars were paid into the T than are received by it from employes. A simple filing problem, probably. You wouldn't want your driver to take his eyes off the road. If you'd have wanted a cashier you'd have hired one. There's this paragraph or so about one man making change with 'large denomination' bills and then being seen putting the big bills in his pocket.

Why would they have put pockets in those uniforms if they weren't to be used as a safe stash for T money? There's also the part about missing money from the coin fare, $517,000. Then there's the bit about not getting what's owed to them from the parking lots they hire, figured at $39,000 minimal.

But like any book, you find your favorite parts. Mine is the overtime. The reports says the Authority paid its police $500,000 in overtime in '81. Of that a quarter of a million dollars went to 26 officers during weeks when those officers were paid 'significant' leaves of absence the same weeks.

It says some of the employes got sick pay or vacation pay for 16 hours the weeks they got 16 or more hours of overtime. On the surface of it, that may seem a problem. But if you look at it another way, the expenditure becomes more clear.

Say you take leave two or three days a week. That's more leave than you'd have if you'd been gone a regular amount of time. So it's 'over' time leave and you have to have overtime pay for all that extra sick or vacation time.

The MBTA cost $349 million to run in 1981. Having read the audit, I marvel they were able to keep it down to that. The book is a study in how not to do something. It's truly impressive that the state claims as its own an operation that is a tribute to mismanagement if not to outright theft. I haven't heard yet who's been chosen as being in charge of doing something about that audit, let alone any wise utterances from him.

One would love to harbor the hope that the miscreants running and allowing the modus operandi of the MBTA are the black sheep of the government, a mistake that happened through no one's fault, a little 'whoops' at the state level.

Let's cling to that thought. Because, believe me, if this book didn't make you laugh a lot, you'd have to cry.

... Angler's corner

By Greg Derr

North River Shad are attracting many anglers to the banks of the Indian Head River in Hanover and to the South River in Marshfield. Water levels two feet higher than normal have restricted fishing to heavily weighted shad darts.

The shad dart, consisting of little more than a hook imbedded in a lead sinker, is painted in a variety of colors. They're designed to rest on the bottom with the hook pointing up to prevent snags and to hook the shad in the upper lip which tends to be firmer than the bottom lip.

Most seasoned fishermen cast the dart into a slow stretch of water, letting it sink to the streambed. The dart sits on the bottom waiting for a shad to pass.

For some unexplained reason, shad strike at the dart. Shad by nature are not meat eaters; they feed on plankton as a rule.

Shad are known for their wild runs and are commonly called the "Poor Man's Salmon" for their fighting ability. Shad roe (eggs ready to be spawned) are wildly sought after for caviar.

Fishing is usually the most effective at night, but you should be familiar with the area you are fishing before stumbling around in the dark.

George Doucette of Adams Sporting Goods is sponsoring a shad derby. Anglers with the three largest fish will receive trophies; the first place winner also getting a custom made rod built by Bill Smith of Adams.

Adams Sporting Goods is located on Route 139 in Hanover near the North River and carries a complete line of shad fishing tackle. Be polite and they'll give you up to date reports on fishing conditions as well.

As of this writing, Steve Britts of Plymouth has caught the largest shad of the season—5 pounds 12 oz.

The Division of Marine Fisheries has confirmed that an Atlantic salmon was caught last week in the North River. The fish, caught by Joe Barrow of Marshfield, weighed in at 11 pounds 10 oz. Biologist Ken Reback who heads the coho salmon project in the river took scale samples from the fish for analysis.

Living in the country is even better than it used to be. Lots of new comforts have been added—as you'll soon see when you visit The Meadows in Hingham.

This fine group of attached single family homes offers the spaciousness and fine construction of yesteryear with conveniences grandma never even contemplated. There are kitchens with sunny breakfast bays... lots of fireplaces... vaulted and tray ceilings... large private courtyards... 2-car garages... swimming pool, whirlpool, tennis courts and a clubhouse. The location, on wildflower-strewn meadows in the lovely town of Hingham, is idyllic.

Two and three bedroom homes range from $155,000 to $210,000 during our opening period. The furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Take Exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free Street one mile to our entrance. Call (617) 740-1500 for an appointment.

From the garden . . .

By Joan Pinkham

The Romans called it "the growing month," poets say it's "the merry month," but in our town, when the pink of apple blossoms explode and the lavender of lilacs and violets appear beneath the Flower Moon, we tend to call it "heaven." Gardeners everywhere have peered through April's rain-splattered windows, eager to get on with their chores and now we're off and running. It's time to plant trees, shrubs and perennials, to prune evergreens before new growth begins and when the nights get warmer, house plants can be brought out to sheltered spots for a summer in the garden. Just leave them in their pots in the proper exposure and watch them thrive.

After taking time out to enjoy the long-awaited emerald sheen of bushes and trees, take a deep breath and turn to the task of planting your glads, dahlias, callas and hardy vegetables such as carrots, lettuce and beets. Arthur Baker gardens for a hobby and is thinking now about setting out one hundred strawberry plants he ordered from Deerfield. His Marshall berries ordered from Oregon four years ago, are still alive and well and he has shared them at plant sales, so many of Marshfield's native berries are still around. Years ago, farmers had huge berry patches of these luscious fruits and would take them into the market on the evening train. "No California berry can compare," according to Baker.

Now that the birds are nesting, natural food is abundant and your feeder is less appealing to them, but you can encourage some of them to settle down and raise their offspring in your garden if you provide bird houses. Chickadees, downy woodpeckers, wrens and song sparrows are among the most frequent bird house occupants and some woodpeckers, bluejays and robins will live near the house if your garden has tickets of trees and shrubs nearby. Each evening at dusk, the open field leading down to the banks of the North River which now belongs to Mass. Audubon offers a beautiful display by the woodcocks--stop by the stone wall on Summer St. if you're up that way.

When you want to set aside your rake long enough to have a little fun, our seaside town has much to offer. Our conservation lands offer trails for hiking, land for overnight camping and a launching site for canoes on the North River beside the Union St. bridge where you can picnic on Blueberry Island, or look for red-wing blackbirds in Mounce's Meadow. Not too many of us are aware of the Wampanoag canoe passage, a water trail used by the Indians long before the Pilgrims came. The entire route can be covered in three to five days, or explored a section at a time. From the North River, through inland brooks and ponds the Taunton River, the train is said to be quite a challenge. For a free brochure and map write to: Box 1620 in Pembroke, 02359.

We all envy friends whose plants and gardens flourish with enviable ease and we wish we had their "green thumb." That expression originated in old Scotland where farmers stained their thumbs from handling so many green pots. Now we say that those who really love plants and gardens are "born with green thumbs." A glimpse of the geranium-filled porch window at Lois and Russell Chandlers' home is a delight. The glassed-in front is aglow with red geraniums that reach to the ceiling and have been blooming ever since Russell brought them in from their window boxes last fall. Last spring they were individual 6" pots that wintered in 60 degree sunshine for all to enjoy.

For five brief years, the North River Boat Club held its annual opening day in May, with hotly contested boat races. To the tunes of White's orchestra, both Norwell and Marshfield members gathered under a full moon to dance on the veranda of the clubhouse where Japanese lanterns glowed. The club burgee of blue and white was flown from the clubhouse built by Nathaniel Phillips on land leased from Mrs. Julia Thomas at the town landing at Union Bridge. In addition to canoeing, sailing and rowing, members enjoyed minstrel shows, dances and turkey suppers. It all ended with the storm of '98 when the new mouth of the North River caused flooding of the boat house at every high tide.

Just about now, the spring migration of birds is at its peak and our expert resident birders are in their glory. David Clapp spotted a turkey vulture on Smoke Hill Ridge off Grove St., a bird common in New York and New Jersey, but not seen in town for the past few years. It has a six-foot wing spread and so shouldn't be too hard to find. Our Conservation Commissioner Warren Harrington has seen little flocks of palm warblers, upland sandpipers at Dwyer's Farm, a sora (rail,) a little marsh creature, in the Cherry Hill area. Rose-breasted grosbeaks have been at some feeders and on Spring St., one of Warren's neighbors called him when she was perplexed about a bird at her feeder. The size of a goldfinch, it was partly blue with a brown head and they finally determined that it was a female indigo bunting in the process of changing its plumage. A pair of chickadees was found nesting at Dwyers Farm and by now, probably everyone has spotted the Canada geese winging north. These birds move north and south exactly as does 35 degree temperatures and is one of the most regular migrations there is.

Wildflowers are a delight at this time of year and down at Green Harbor in the parking area there is an abundance of trout lillies, called by some "yellow adders' tongue." Six to eight inches in height with splotched leaves, there are hundreds of blooms in a golden patch, a unique sight, for other than the Glades in North Scituate, they are not seen around here.

When tulips finish blooming, the faded flowers should be pinched off. The same is true of daffodils and hyacinths. If left on, seed may form. The development of seed takes food which otherwise would be used to produce next year's flowers. The leaves and flower stem should not be removed until they turn yellowish green. During this period they produce food by the process of photosynthesis, the bulbs gain in size and ripen and flowers are formed.

Satuit Bowlaway report . . .

By Don Dwyer

Monday Nights Marshfield Men's League reports that the team of M.A. Lopes Construction leads the North Division by seven points over the Scituate Concrete Pipe. In the South Division Marshfield Auto Body has a commanding 21 point lead to almost wrap up their division. (Looks like the Auto Body team will be hard to beat in their money rolloffs.) The top High Average men to date have Howie Phillips leading all with a sparkling 121.7, followed by Larry Jenkins' 120.2, Old Rip Van Winkle 118.5, Larry Nangle 117, Ron Burrell 111.4, Phillip James 111.3, Mel Westerman 111.2, Gilly Kent 111.1, John Frazier 110.3 and Bill Kenyon 110.1. (From the looks of these excellent averages, everyone must be eating well.) The Super Star for the season has to go to Howie Phillips who rolled a fantastic 480 High Three last week including a classic 182 High Single. Howie had strings of 182, 147 and 151 for his 480 total. (I think Howie's been visiting Cape Canaveral with all that outer space bowling.) Other highlights from last week's High Scores were Old Rip 384, Ken Roderick 382, Gilly Kent 367, and Larry Jenkins 359. (The Bowlaway congratulates all these Monday Night Men for their super attendance and fantastic scores all season long.)

Tuesday Morning's Ivy League ended their season last week with the Sapphires nosing out the Diamonds for first place honors in the second half. A roll off between these two teams for the Championship will be held next Tuesday. (This match should be a hummer all the way. Good luck to both.) For the season Most Spares Honors went to Sandy Hartley with 192 and Pat Torrey, the Most Strikes Honors with 73. (That's more spares and strikes than I've rolled in 10 years. Just great bowling, you two.) Class winners for the season had Pat Torrey leading all with a collossal High Average of 110.3. Beverly Lembo won Class B with 101.2, followed by Sally Leate who took Class C's honors rolling a 95.1. Dolly Sunnerberg captured Class D with a 90.1. Last week super scores came from Marie Merritt who led all rolling 359, next in line Dot Bresnahan had 353, Sandy Hartley 345, Pat Torrey 323, Charlene Ketterer 319, Carol Castagnetti 313, Midge Kuntz 312, Mary Wattendorf 309, Priscilla Shea 305, Linda Zimmer and Lois Babbitt 304, Kip Ahearn 303, and Joyce Kibbe and Beverly Lembo 300. (These gals have all had an outstanding season with congratulations to all from all of us at the Bowlaway.)

Thursday Morning's Coffee and Donut League has the Sankas in front by 10 points heading down the homestretch with only two weeks to go for the season. The Yubans are in second place hoping to beat out the Sankas for all the honors. High Average for all the league is still in doubt with Marie Merritt still holding first place with 99.3, followed very closely behind by Priscilla Sindone rolling 98.5. (Could be last string and last ball to a winner.) Sally Leate leads all with the Most Strikes with 40 so far this season. Last week's Highlights had Betty Johndrow the Star of the Week rolling a High Single 120 and High Triple of 331. (Good bowling, Betty.) Cheers for Isabell Martell. She had a Double Spare! (Everybody's getting into the act.)

Thursday Night's Merchants League with two weeks left in their season has Finnie Sales leading Division I by four points over Artley's Animals in a contest that is the closest of all the four divisions. Satuit Bowlaway has Division II wrapped up leading by 18 points over their nearest rivals the Richarson's Team. Division III The Seacoast Deli, has an 11 point lead over the Cabinets by Sunny Team and still could be a close one to the wire. (Sunny says if McCorkell could be on time they could win it all.) Scituate Concrete Pipe has Division IV captured leading by 14 points over Paul Young Motors. The Merchants rolloff will be held May 15. At the Bowlaway at 1 p.m. with teams rolling for part of the league's $10,000 in prize money. Class High Average leaders have Joe Ganem leading all 100 men with a super snappy 123.8, followed by Class B leader Don Oppenheim's 116.6. Ken Evans has a slight lead in Class C holding with 112.7, and Class D has Mark Patterson in front rolling a 109.4. Tom Chantre has Class E captured for the season with a 106.4, followed by Chet Sunnerberg's 104.1 in Class F's race to the wire. Class G has Joe Healy in another slim lead with an averae of 100.2. (Great scores from all these men with over 70 bowlers averaging over-the-hundred mark. Just fantastic, when you think about it.)

Response for our up and coming summer leagues has been great, so if any of you would like to join our fun for the summer, call us soon.

YMCA swim show

The 34th annual synchronized swim show will be held Tuesday and Wednesday, May 10 and 11 at 7:45 p.m. at the South Shore YMCA in Quincy.

There are approximately 40 swimmers in the show ranging in age from eight to 60 plus. The theme of the show this year is color and the music will include selections such as "The Pink Panther," "Hill Streeet Blues," "Mood Indigo," "Goldfinger," and "Ebony and Ivory."

Carol Henry of Cohasset will direct the show again this year. She also coaches the advanced teen group and swims with the women's group. Amy Hobbs, Jennifer Martin and Annie Henry of the Deer Hill School as well as Jeannie Baccari and Suzie Collins of the high school will be participating in the show.

Annie Henry placed third in the New England Junior Olympic Synchronized Swimming Meet in Worcester Sunday, May 1. Annie and her partner, Jill Valle of Milton and Milton Academy, are now qualified to enter the Eastern Zone Meet in July. The girls must do four compulsory and two elected figures plus a swimming routine and compete in age groups in solos, duets, trios and teams.

Two other swimmers of Henry's Y team placed second in their duet age division. These girls, plus six others, including Jeannie Baccari and Suzie Collins, are members of the U.S. Synchronized Swimming Association and participated in four meets this year including the regional age group meet held in Glens Falls, New York in March. There were 300 plus swimmers at this meet and the South Shore Y placed second in duets and a team division in the New England meet which qualified these girls for the regionals.

Tickets for the YMCA show may be purchased at the door. Come and see the newest women's sport to be admitted to the '84 Olympic games in L.A.

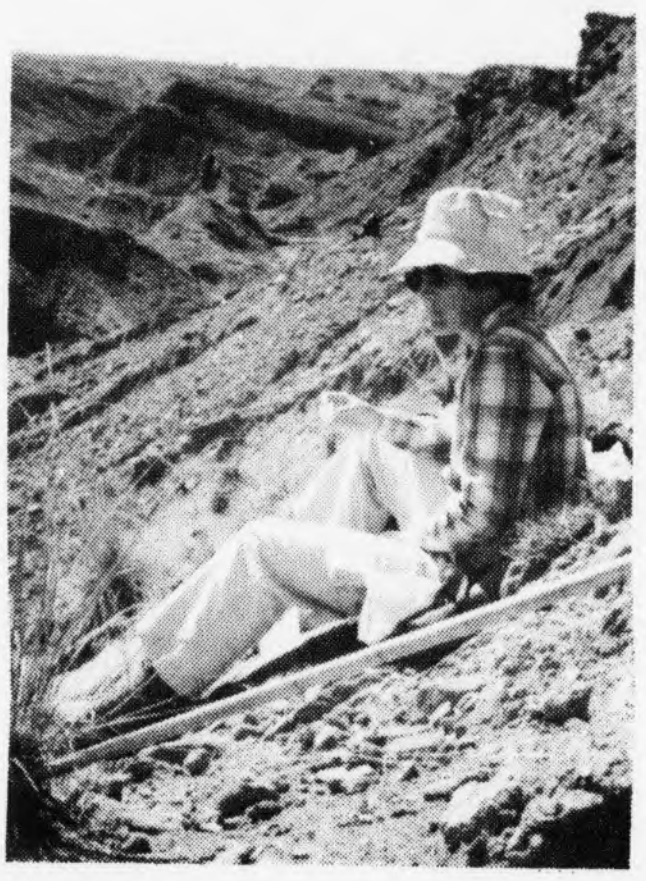
Report from Pakistan . . . part three

By Philip Dormitzer

The longer I stay in Pakistan, the more I like it. The countryside around Chingi is awe-inspiring. We are camped about a half-mile from the Gorge, an immense canyon with sheer, layer-caked sides in some places and multicolored silt embankments and collapsing sandstone bluffs in others. This is the first time I have seen scenery that is literally breath-taking. While I work, camel trains pass by and herds of cows, goats, sheep and mules mixed together graze on the thorny plants poking out of the badlands. Whenever we relax, the drivers and cook play Pashtu and Punjabi music — you are always reminded of where you are.



The most exotic scene yet occurred while we took a jeep to the town of Chingi. As usual, the jeep broke down (our vehicles are taken through fields, rivers, mudholes, and rock ledges). Across the plain was a wedding. About a hundred women had gathered in brightly colored burkahs (the more devout wore black). The bride was led to them by a woman wearing a headdress. Firecrackers were lit and music was played. In the foreground a herd of cattle roamed across the fields, and on a ridge in the distance a caravan of camels was passing. Since we were at a distance, I risked taking a picture. That may be the only picture of women that I get in Pakistan. There is almost complete separation of the sexes here.

Another time, we were invited to a banquet for men following the marriage of the daughter of the farmer who owns our land. (Since this man is poor, the affair was much less lavish than the earlier one we witnessed.) According to the Pakistanis who are with us, although they were neighbors, the bride and groom may never have spoken to each other before the marriage. We were invited into a small room with three charboys (frame beds), a tin box, and an uneven little table for furniture (this was brought for company). The first course was sugar mixed with flour — we did our best to eat it, but it was unpalatable, and we didn't dare drink the water. The second course was sugared rice — the same problem. The third course was a fire-breathing curry — all this and not a drop of water. Nevertheless, the meal did give us a chance to see how the local people live. The accommodations were crowded and austere (there were a few decorative cloth hangings), but not terrible. The room was comfortable and clean.

Today I took an all-day hike with Kay Behrensmeyer (paleobiologist, Smithsonian Institution) for great distances through the canyons. Kay says that the views rival those of the side gorges of the Grand Canyon. We passed faults, sheer-edged passes, water-carved caves, undercuts, waterfalls. I even scrambled through quicksand. I may have been the first Westerner to explore some of the canyons since the British left. Kay was almost certainly the first Western woman to see them. All that my travel guide has to say about this area is that it is little known and seldom visited. Some of it has never been properly mapped.

Every night we are lulled to sleep by the calling of the jackals around the camp and the crying of the hawks overhead. The nights are terrifically clear — there have been only three days of rain this month, and it is starting to warm up.

Two Pakistanis enjoy a smoke from their hookah, above. Below, the campsite of the anthropological team at Chingi with jeep that transported them to town and dig sites.

Noted Smithsonian Inst. biologist, Kay Behrensmeyer, rests during all-day canyon hike.

around town

☐The secretaries of the Cohasset school system received a big surprise last week. The teachers, with Fran Cronin as the instigator, sent them to the Whiton House to celebrate National Secretaries week. They really appreciated the effort, and went back to work a full and happy crew.

☐The 12th Annual Ride-A-Bike took place Sunday and was deemed a grand Success. The weather, though a bit warm, was the first sunny Sunday in six weeks. The participants all did their jobs well. The money that was raised will benefit the MARC (Mass. Assoc. for Retarded Citizens).

☐After attending a "sneak preview" of the senior class play to be held May 5, 6 and 7, it deserves a super-fantastic review. It's always amazing to see the hidden talents of the students. Without giving away too many surprises, but hopefully tempting your curiosity, I'll mention a few highlights. Picture Mia Graham in a glamorous costume singing a solo from "The Boyfriends," a barbershop quartet that is superb, Justine Hoffman as an actress and dancer (wonderful), Rich Evans as a Temperance man trying to reform a great cast and Dan Bowen dancing (Rich wanted to use hockey tape to mend his costume; Dan kneed one of the dancers in the head while doing his routine, so they weren't totally out of characters.

Mrs. Wood's Fiction/Poetry Workshop, a junior-senior English course at Cohasset High School, contributed these creative writing pieces...

Two weeks ago on a Saturday morning, I sat up in bed and decided that today would be the first day of the rest of my life. I resolved to drastically change my sloppy style of living. No more dragging around the house in my bathrobe at eleven in the morning, eating brownies, and yawning for me. I decided to start running. Little did I know at the time what was in store for me.

I leaped out of bed and proceeded to execute ten sit-ups on the carpet. After the seventh sit-up, I knew I was in trouble. What muscles I had were protesting greatly; and in those places where no muscles exist, my body simply refused to cooperate at all. Sighing, I flopped down on the carpet, squashing numerous teddy bears, and cleared my muddled thoughts. Obviously, if ten sit-ups were this difficult for me, running probably wouldn't be a piece of cake. But since I had made the resolution, I decided to stick to it.

Shuffling wearily into my shorts, I caught a glimpse of myself in the mirror. My hair looked like it had been dragged through a bush backwards, and my skin was an interesting shade of gray. Yes, this was definitely a good time to start running.

Downstairs, by a stroke of bad luck, I met my father who was also dressed for running. Every day at 7 he rushes off energetically to run about six miles. By getting up at 6:30, I had hoped to avoid him, but the hand of Fate was against me. He bounced along the hall to meet me, where I was propped up against the front door, snoring. "Going for a run, Sam?" he asked enthusiastically. I roused myself, and removed my inert form from the door. "You bet!" I croaked, trying to sound as eager as Daddy, but failing miserably. "Oh good!" he chirped. "You can run with me. It'll be fun!" I nodded feebly, tried to smile, and before I knew it, we were outside jogging along the road.

Now, it was the end of February when all of this tomfoolery was taking place, and it was none too warm outside. A few snowflakes floated down from the frosty sky, and an icy wind squealed down the street. All my good sense rebelled at this folly and I stopped jogging, turned around and started home. I would have made it too but for Daddy who bellowed from fifty yards down the street, "Come on, Sam! Don't stop now. Got to keep that old circulation pumping!" Deciding that the insane asylum was definitely lacking one David Barrett, I grunted acquiecsence, and recommenced my feeble jog. Before long, my lungs were burning, I was gasping frantically for air, and my legs had turned into rubber bands. Needless to say, Daddy was still tearing along about twenty-five yards ahead, looking as if he were thriving on the cold weather. Hearing me wheezing away behind him, he called, "Come on, Sam. We've only done about half a mile. You're not tired yet are you? After all, I'm twenty-five years older than you, and I'm not having any problem."

Well, this last comment irritated me. He was right! I was only eighteen. I should be able to run two miles with no problem whatsoever. Thus decided, I hauled myself out of the bush into which I had fallen, and chugged off again down the road. Unfortunately, the state of my lungs had not improved during my short rest in the bush, and in next to no time, I was gasping like an overloaded freight train. By now I had travelled almost a mile which I could never have done without the aid of my father. Happily enough, it was a circular route, and home was once again in sight. I staggered up the driveway, through the front door, and collapsed on the sofa, my breath rattling through my lungs.

Already home and briskly executing deep knee bends was none other than my favorite father. Hearing the agonized squeal of sofa springs as I flopped onto it, he jogged into the room and regarded me prostrate upon the couch. "You know, you really ought to warm down, Sam," he said solicitously. "You might hurt your muscles if you don't." I muttered some rather rude answers to this comment while regarding my legs, the muscles of which appeared to have gone on strike. Daddy laughed cruelly, and left the room at a trot. Slowly, my mind stopped spinning, and my legs regained feeling. I hefted myself into a sitting position, stood up gingerly, and lurched toward the kitchen. Unsteadily, I groped for a glass, filled it up with water, and drank the whole thing in a single draft. I repeated this procedure several times before I stopped feeling thirsty. Feeling perfectly rotten, I took to my bed for the rest of the day.

The next day, amazingly enough, I still had the stamina to stick to yesterday's resolution, and once again I started running. I could hardly believe it, but I only had to stop once, and my lungs no longer felt as if the China syndrome were going off inside them. Happily, I jogged into the house, gulped down two glasses of water, and sat down to rest. Within half an hour I felt better and was even able to eat some lunch. Whatever next!

Since then, I have progressed to three miles a day and I have even joined the track team, much to that team's chagrin. Mr. Emmons thinks I am quite crazy to want to run the Cohasset Road Race; every time I mention it to him, he has to disguise a giggle. Well, fie on him. I'll show them all!

Birth

The day, full of time, stops,
To be remembered.
Relief expands to thinking
Mother becomes emotion
Love expands to life
Life expands...Contracts
Expands, contracts, to love.

The Day, full of time, stops,
To be remembered.
The face hides, full and round, behind the growing mass
Of wax on the cake.
Round anticipation bursts
Over flame, extinguishes
All but one.
The face seeks the newest one,
"The most specialist;"
Gives a thought; blows it
Out.
The Day is forgotten in time by
The next day and then the next one.

The Day, full of time, stops,
To be remembered.
Unbridled sounds bombard
Submissive, experienced ears.
Sighing mouth opens in view,
Says nothing,and so happiness is
Told to search for its limit.
The Day is forgotten, in time, by
The next Day, and, then, the next
One.

The day, devoid of time, stops,
Being remembered.
Worn, tired, relieved eyes
Close.
And open.
Brilliant, warm light saturates the room
Coming from behind the eyes.
But the teardrop on the satin cuff
Is dark and muddy.
And the tear sheds an eye.
And the eye sheds a person.
And on and on.
But it is forgotten
In time, by the next day
And then that next one after that.

Andrew Long

The Beauty and Her Beast

The beauty's memory of the beast remains,
The beast a gallant white ghost
With godspeed on his feet.
Everybody knows them,
The inseparable pair, the beauty and her beast.
Just getting better
Conquering destruction, trial after trial.
Why, why do they do so well?
With power, grace and perfect form.
Over and over, sweat, pain, blood and fear.
Yet the picture, beautiful of the beauty and her beast.
He keeps her well, no one knows what he thinks
Not even the beauty.
Maybe not even the beast.
Eyes filled with hope and love
But is it all a blind desire?
Nothing will separate them
Memories bond with furious tears.
Will he forget? No one will ever know.
Not even the beauty,
Maybe not even the beast.

Engagement

Healy—O'Donnell

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Healy of Cohasset announce the engagement of their daughter, Kathleen Marie, to Mr. Dominic Joseph O'Donnell of Glasgow, Scotland and Somerville.

Kathleen is a 1980 graduate of Bridgewater State College and is currently enrolled in the masters program at Simmons College. She is employed as a librarian for Coopers & Lybrand of Boston.

Mr. O'Donnell is a graduate of the University of Kent at Canterbury, England and Heythrop College, University of London. He is currently enrolled in the doctoral program at Boston University. He is employed as a clinic coordinator at the Pine Street Inn, Boston.

A July 30 wedding is planned.

Friends of Library donate to memorial fund

The Friends of the Cohasset Library voted to give $500 to the Evelyn B. Wood Memorial Fund of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. This is the sixth gift of $500 or more, bringing the fund to $4,075.

Evelyn Wood, an assistant librarian at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for 32 years, retired in 1981 due to illness. She died in March of this year. Friends of Evelyn and Joe Wood asked the library trustees about the feasibility of a memorial to Evelyn. The trustees welcomed the establishment of an endowment to strengthen the book collection and library services.

A generous gift from Mr. and Mrs. F. Gregg Bemis launched the fund. Other major donors, in addition to the Friends of the Library, are: Mrs. Richard Chute, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Williams, and Mrs. Richard Wallace. Numerous other gifts have been made to the fund. A plaque in memory of Evelyn Wood will be placed in the library.

Richard Hayes, library director, said such a memorial is most worthwhile as it will bring knowledge and value to others for many years to come. Hayes said the trustees will consider the best use of the Wood Fund at their May meeting.

According to Hayes, the trustees will be considering the feasibility of increasing the library's endowment funds in order to maintain services. He said tax limits have frozen the library's book budget for three years while prices have gone up 45 percent.

Obituary

Thayer fashion show

Fashion, fine food and flair will highlight the Spring Fashion show presented by the Thayer Academy Parents Board on Saturday, May 7 at the Sheraton Tara in Braintree.

Cocktails and boutique shopping will be held from noon to 1:30 p.m., followed by lunch til 2:30 p.m., then the fashion show til 3:30 p.m.

Custom jewelery, quilted fashions, mounted shells, personalized gifts, knitted accessories, calligraphy, deisgner sweatsuits and more will be offered at the boutique.

There will be favors and door prizes including gift certificates, plants, tote bags and more.

Climax will be the benefit drawing with a Panasonic TV and weekend at Sheraton Tara and Great American Jelly Bean Machine among the prizes.

Choral Arts bake sale

The Choral Art Society will hold two benefit bake sales. On Saturday, May 7, members of the Society will be selling their baked goods at Angelo's Super Market in the Marshfield Plaza and at the Stop and Shop in the Cohasset Shopping Plaza. In charge of the Marshfield sale at Angelo's is Susan Bennett of Green Harbor. Diana Rousseau of Cohasset is managing the sale of the Cohasset Stop and Shop.

The twenty-fifth anniversary season of the Choral Art Society has been an exciting but an expensive one, and the bake sale will help fund a rewarding year.

Two widely acclaimed performances of the "Messiah" in December began the season, followed in March by a special concert featuring William Adams, founder of the Society, as guest conductor, with a gala champagne reception.

The anniversary season will conclude with a program of music by Mozart, Handel and Brahms, William Sano, conductor, Saturday, May 14, at 8 p.m. at St. Luke's Episcopal Church in Scituate.

Soloists for the concert are Paula Clough and Kurt Schneider of Marshfield; Kathleen Keegan of Scituate; Tamsyn Elliott, Cohasset; Linda Healy, Duxbury; Robert Baker, Hanover; and Claus Hasbrouck, Swampscott, all members of the chorus.

Pamela Wolfe of Norwell will be the soprano soloist in Mozart's motet "Exsultate jubilate." Tickets are $5, seniors and students, $4, and will be available at the bake-sale tables, from members of the chorus, and at the door.

Diabetes instruction session

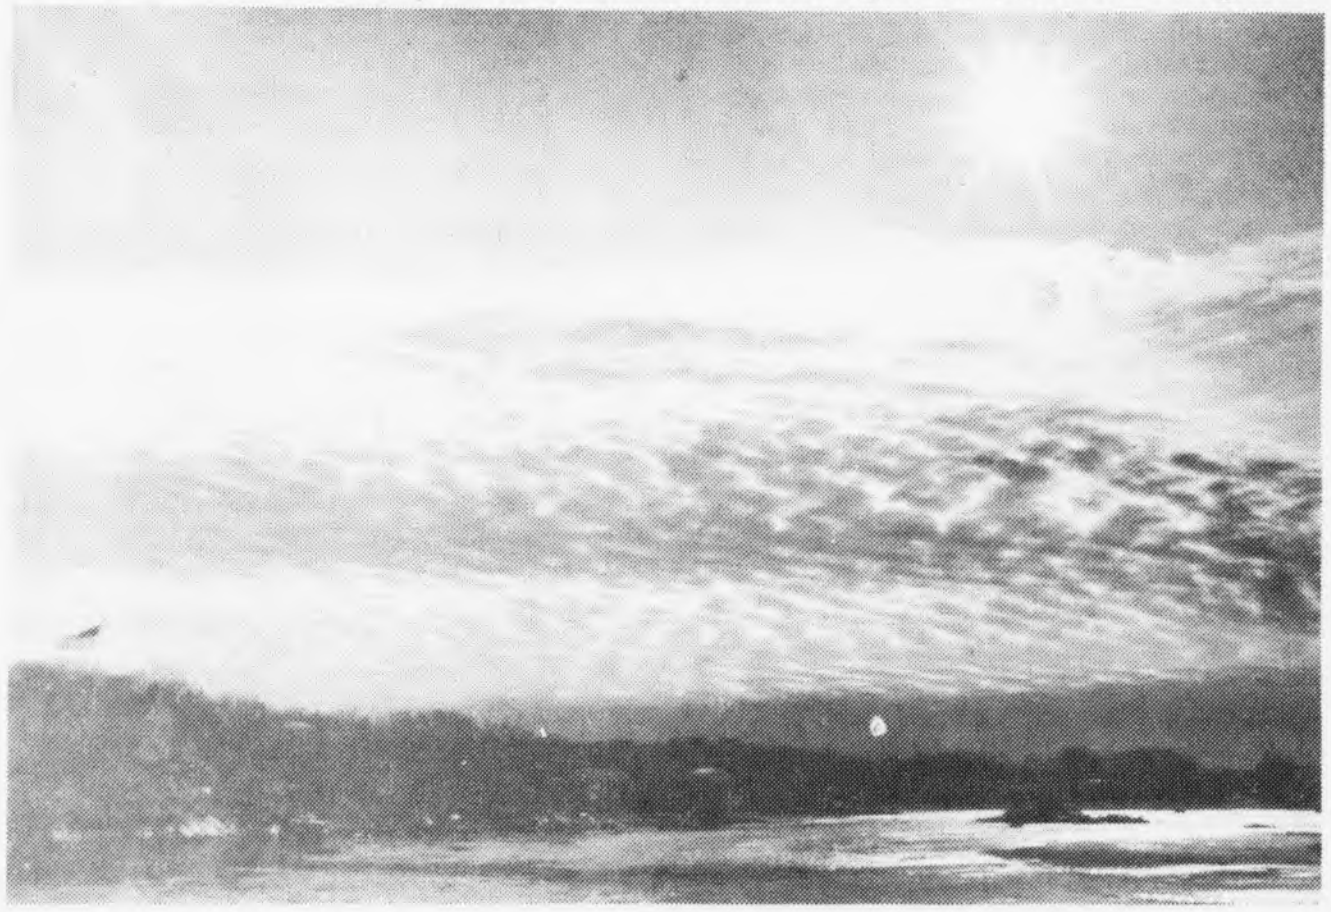
The Social Service League of Cohasset and Greater Boston Diabetes Society will present a four-part Diabetes instruction session Wednesdays, May 4, 11, 18 and 25, from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m., at the Second Congregational Church (43 Highland Ave.).

The education classes will include a slide presentation and topics on nutritional management of diabetes, administration of insulin and prevention of complications.

A Tetanus Clinic will be conducted May 17 from 5 to 7 p.m. at the Cohasset Town Hall for Cohasset residents under the supervision of Dr. Golden.

Decorator' Show House

Elm Bank at 900 Washington Street, Wellesley, is the site of the thirteenth annual Decorators' Show House sponsored by the Junior League of Boston, Inc.



The doors opened April 24 for three weeks, seven days a week. All proceeds fund the 16 community service projects sponsored by the League in the greater Boston area.

In addition to the 41 decorators who transformed the house and gardens, Show House has two other attractions. The Boutique in an adjacent tent has 175 consigners offering their unique, quality hand-crafted items for sale. The Cafe Pineapple in another colorful tent, serves salads, sandwiches, desserts and beverages.

The Show House will be open from April 24 through May 15, Monday through Saturday, 10 to 3, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, 6 to 8:30, and Sunday afternoons, 1 to 4:30. Tickets are available at the door and no children under eight or photographic equipment are permitted inside the house.

For additional ticket information write P.O. Box 78, Newton Lower Falls, 02152, or phone 431-7727.

Cohasset designers at the Show House are: "The Retreat," Phil Smith and Steven Limbach, Creations Interiors, 17 South Main Street; "The Bath," Ellen Morrissey, 137 Beach Street; "Afternoon Tea Room" Marie Johnston, Johnston Interiors, 120 Fair Oaks Lane.

DAR afternoon workshop Wednesday

By Hazel Arnold MacIvor

The Col. Thomas Lothrop Chapter of the DAR in Cohasset will hold an afternoon workshop for prospective members on Wednesday, May 11 at the Lothrop House, 14 Summer St., Cohasset at 2 p.m. Mrs. William J. Sen of Lexington will conduct the workshop. Any woman 18 years of age or over, who has an ancestor who fought in the American Revolutionary War is eligible to join the Daughters of the American Revolution.

What do the "Daughters" do other than trace their Revolutionary ancestors? They encourage patriotism in our youth by presenting a "Good Citizen" award to those high school students whom classmates, teachers and counselors vote as having the highest qualities of a good citizen. The Col. Thomas Lothrop Chapter gives two of these awards every spring, one each to an outstanding student in Cohasset High School and the Whitman-Hanson Regional High School. This year's winners are Paul S. Johnson of 135 Nichols Road, Cohasset and Michael Ganshirt of 58 Woodlawn Circle, Whitman. The winners will be presented their awards at the May 11 meeting by Mrs. Drexel Gibson, Good Citizens Chairman of the Col. Thomas Lothrop Chapter.

The seal and insignia of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution have as their objective, Education, History and Patriotism. In respect to education, the Daughters of Massachusetts support two wholly owned and operated schools, the Kate Duncan School in Grant, Alabama and the Tamassee School in Tamassee, South Carolina. In addition, the Massachusetts Daughters lend their support to St. Mary's School, Crossmore, North Carolina, the Hindman Settlement School, Hindman, Kentucky, and the Hillside School for Boys at Marlboro, Mass. All of the above schools are run for the benefit of economically deprived children.

The DAR takes serious its responsibilities in the matter of preserving our nation's history. The National DAR Library in Washington, D.C., the second largest libray in the United States, has thousands of books, pamphlets and microfilm rolls of state, county, local and family histories, as well as the Americana Collection of original historical documents pertaining to the American Revolution. Scholars and researchers from this country and the world over, as well as Daughters and prospective members, avail themselves of these facilities.

The National Society maintains a Museum of the decorative arts in the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries. The twenty-eight Period Rooms, whose furnishings are donated by the Chapter in the fifty states, reflect interiors in general before 1830. Both the Museum and the Library are open to the public every day except national holidays and during Constitutional Convention Week in mid-April.

The DAR fosters patriotism in a number of ways: it encourages parents to enroll eligible children (those having a Revolutionary patriot) in the National Society of the Children of the American Revolution (CAR). Children from 1-18 years of age are qualified. CAR encourages patriotism through its programs which are educational and at the same time, fun. The DAR "perpetuates the memory and spirit of the men and women who achieved American Independence, by the acquisition and protection of historical spots, and the erection of monuments; by the encouragement of historical research in relation to the American Revolution and the publication of its results; by the preservation of documents and relics, and the records of individual services of Revolutionary Soldiers, Sailors and Patriots, and by the promotion of celebrations of all patriotic anniversaries."

Make reservations on or before May 9 for the Workshop by calling the Regent, Mrs. Angus Stewart MacIvor at 837-7320 or the Recording Secretary, Mrs. E. Lawrence Parker, Jr. at 383-6930.

Greek Church celebrates Easter season

The Greek Orthodox Church of the Panagia in Cohasset and Father Dean Mendrinos are immersed in its most holy and spiritual season of the calendar year.

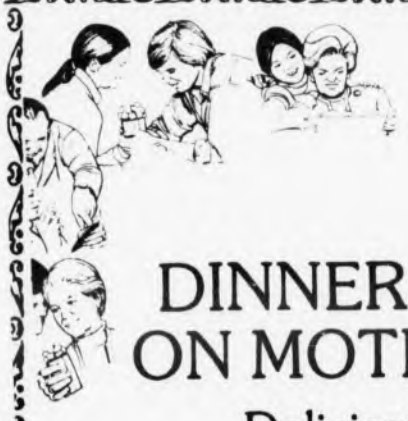
This week all the Orthodox celebrate the "Passion and Resurrection of Jesus Christ."

Friday, May 6 at 3:30 p.m., the Service of the Descent will take place. All children are invited to attend this service. That evening at 7:30 p.m., the Service of Lamentations will take place. The Service of the Resurrection and the Easter Liturgy will take place Saturday, May 7 from 11 p.m. to 1:15 a.m. Easter Sunday Service is at 11 a.m. to noon.

A special date for everyone in the South Shore Community who would like to support the young Greek Orthodox Church of the Virgin Mary Panagia, on Jerusalem Road in Cohasset served by Father Dean Mendrinos, is the Dedication Dinner to be held at the Golden Rooster, Scituate, Monday, May 16. A cocktail hour will begin at 6:30 p.m., dinner will be served at 7:30 p.m.

The menu includes fruit cup, salad, chicken supreme stuffed with rice, vegetable in season, wine, dessert and coffee.

Bishop Anthimos and the Chancellor Father Steven and Presbyteria Kyriakou of the New England Diocese will attend.



If interested in attending this function, call Maria Barber at 659-7466 or Sharon Costas at 545-4463.

Don Bates of Cohasset Savings Bank hands Jane Goedecke and Jim Urmson a $200 savings bond for last weekend's AFS Auction. The bond, which in turn was raffled off to Mrs. B. Coleman, was donated by the bank. Goedecke and Jo-Ann Rossi chaired the successful event. Urmson and Linton Young were auctioneers extraordinaire. (Greg Derr photo)
